BULK RATE U.S. POSTAGE PAID CARMEL, CA Permit No. 129

OUR 73RD YEAR, NO. 16

April 23, 1987

ERICA TERMAN, a Carmel High School student, experiences the pain, loneliness and frustration of losing a friend to suicide. But obviously she is not the only one on the Monterey Peninsula to have her life impacted by the alarming nationwide increase in teenage suicides. Family, friends and classmates are often helpless victims of teenage suicide, which can reach into even the "safest" of communities. Teenagers in Carmel are no different than teens across the country who have contemplated — and some even completed — this drastic, desperate act. The Peer Counseling program at Carmel High hopes to face and head off these and other teen problems before they get out of hand. (Holly McFarland photo.)

Teen suicide a hard reality even on peninsula

By DAVID LELAND

IT'S HARD to imagine anything more tragic than a teenager taking his life or even seriously contemplating suicide. But the unfortunate truth is that the problem is on the rise nationwide and Carmel is no exception with its share of despondent young people.

Take the case of Becky (her case is in the court system so her real name has not been used in this article). For her, life has become unbearable — the Carmel High School junior tearfully speaks of wanting to take her life.

"I feel helpless, like there's nowhere to go," she says tearfully, as she talks to three fellow students plus counselor Judith Wolfe. "You can't go through the wall and you can't go around it."

Becky has been molested repeatedly by her stepfather who tells her he wants to marry her and, when she tells her mother about the problem she gets beat up.

Recently, she has been living with her grandmother, who says she worries about Becky.

But the grandmother is also emotionally unstable and threatens to kill herself if Becky leaves the home.

"I'm darned if I do and darned if I don't," says Becky, a pretty blond girl who in spite of her problems still manages an occasional smile.

Becky says she also feels guilty about her boyfriend's best friend, who recently committed suicide by "shooting and cutting himself" in front of his girlfriend.

Becky says she had a close relationship with the boy and blames herself for not seeing the tragedy coming. This sentiment was echoed by her former classmates at Pacific Grove High School, where she previously attended classes.

"I went to school and people said 'Why didn't you talk to him' " says Becky, remembering the incident. "He said he had no purpose — I don't think I could have stopped him."

Nevertheless the feeling of guilt lingers.

Unfortunately, Becky's case is not unique. With more than 500 adolescents living in Carmel, professionals on the peninsula say teenage depression and suicidal attempts have risen dramatically this spring.

Currently there are six adolescents at the mental health unit at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, according to Dr. Thomas Burchard, director of child and family services.

This is an extremely high number of young people for an adult unit, says Robin Miner, a nurse at Dominican Hosptial's mental health unit in Santa Cruz.

Miner added that adolescents require different treatment than adults and only are admitted to adult units in cases of dire emergency.

FOR THE purpose of statistics, the Centers For Disease Control in Atlanta defines adolescent as between the ages of 15 and 24.

With this in mind, official figures show that between 5,000 and 6,000 young people took their lives last year, or about 18 each day.

(This figure is low; many cases of suicide are termed "accidental death," according to Diane Ryerson, a certified social worker and director of Adolescent Suicide Awareness Program in Bergen County, N.J.)

"The youth of America are not dying from disease," says Ryerson. "They're dying a sudden and violent death."

Between the years of 1970 and 1980, 49,496 young people took their lives nationwide. At the beginning of that study suicide was occurring at a rate of 8.8 percent per 100,000. Ten years later that number had risen to 12.3 percent per 100,000, says Ryerson.

This rise, she says, is primarily due to the increase of white males committing suicide, which has risen by 89 percent.

"Guys don't talk about it, they just do it," says Ryerson. She added that they complete suicide attempts four to five times more frequently than girls and usually use firearms.

Ryerson said it is especially sad when young people take their life because of what the survivors must experience.

"Mourning a suicide is harder than any other death," she says. "What you have here are a lot of survivors who are victims in their own way."

These victims include family members, teachers, friends and the community as a whole.

AND, WHILE Bruchard says he has only dealt with one suicide on the peninsula during the past five years, he adds that at least 50 suicide attempts have been made in the past 12 months where teens have ended up at the mental health unit at Community Hospital.

"People get depressed, everyone feels sad and blue sometimes," says Bruchard. "But there are many options to suicide."

Many teenagers, however, get tunnel vi-

Artistic endeavor

Dear Editor:

How perfectly marvelous that Carmel will have a splendid performing arts theater. As a spring and fall visitor to your lovely town, I am thoroughly delighted that the quality of artistic endeavor in the Far West will finally be raised above its sad parochialism with Carmel as a new center for world class productions, including a film festival like that in Cannes where I visit during the season.

According to my friend who has joined the Friends of the Sunset Center, Mayor Eastwood has pledged that the theater will be built right away. I absolutely revel that Carmel is attracting sponsors from New York and London who will oversee theater affairs and to know that the working people of Carmel will have enormous blessings. How fortunate for all.

Demolition team

Dear Editor:

After attending all of the Carmel General Plan Committee's public hearings, and seeing the devastation they have wrought on the existing plan---a resident-oriented plan labored over for 2 1/2 years by a broad-based group of Carmel citizens---it strikes me that the committee name might well be changed to the General Plan Destruction Crew, or perhaps the General Plan Demolition Team.

Thoughts on militarism

In the Wonderland of Militaristic Propaganda we are asked to believe the following seven impossible things before breakfast.

1) That the more armaments we have, the safer we are.

2) That political problems can be solved by killing people - lots of them - as in the Middle East and Central America.

3) That the "free world" which we defend is truly free and democratic, even though it includes ruthless, oppressive dictators.

4) That we are supposedly making the world safe for democracy when in reality we are making the world safe for capitalism, two quite different things.

5) That in the name of "defense" we have the right to interfere in the internal affairs of any government we don't like anywhere in the world.

6) That it is all right for our government to do secretly what the American people would find abhorrent - as long as the perpetrators don't get caught.

7) That the Soviet Union is the "evil empire" when, in fact, the evil which threatens all life on earth is militarism.

Let's return to sanity and common sense!

Keep his words alive

Dear Editor:

What a surprise it was to see in your March 26 issue a column by our esteemed and loved cousin — Father Lawrence Farrell — also deceased.

My wife was born in Monterey, we have lived there and in Carmel during the 1950-55 period. Our children were baptized at the Mission by Father Farrell. Keep his good words alive! Thank you.

What kind of town?

Dear Editor:

It's been just about a year since a resident of Carmel by the name of Mr. Eastwood announced that he would be a candidate for the mayor of Carmel. I recognize that the youngish looking middle aged gentleman is tall, blue eyed and has near sculptured overall features, but I liked the former rawhide cowpoke that I observed from a distance during the 1960s.

However, I predict that within five years we'll see Mr. Eastwood, that rawhide cowpoke, eventually end up in a national office of some kind, possibly secretary of defense.

Personally I'm not happy with Carmel or the present mayor of Carmel! For instance, a person still can't get a bucket of fried chicken, a plate of down home corn bread or a pot of baked beans and molasses or a slab of barbecued ribs to take out to the beach in Carmel. I mean what kind of town are you running, Mr. Eastwood? You don't even have a pool hall or a disco in your funny looking little burg of a town?

When I do go to Carmel to eat out I like a little violin or a creative guitar or piano or organ background music while I talk to my lady. I don't mean loud jazz or rock 'n' roll. But I think it's time that the city fathers allow restaurants to have a live controlled, non-volume soft music background.

Other than that, Mr. Eastwood, I noticed that there aren't any hitching posts or water troughs for horses in front of the Pine Inn or La Playa Hotel. I mean, really, what kind of town is Carmel anyway?

Milt the Manager

Dear Editor:

Alberton's striking poster in the window sets the store apart by saying: "The cleanest store in town." Upon entering the store you see a sparkling, delicious salad bar — the "best of its kind." I have lived in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York City and now in California. I have never seen or met a manager with such an aptitude for new ideas that work. Sometime ago he added a delicatessen — now a salad bar with the addition of delicious soups. (I know, I tasted them.)

Milt is a friendly manager, a true-blue friend. He has gone out of his way to please me — a customer at the meat counter. He sent a representative to our house to confirm his sincere wishes to please us.

He does not hide in his office — he is visible in the store, helpful and kind.

A friend, indeed!

Redirect resources

Dear Editor:

"The Pentagon's so-called Black Budget, which is secret funding, has more than tripled during the Reagan administration," said Michael Closson, Director of the Center of Economic Conversion at Mountain View.

Speaking before the March general meeting of the Monterey Peninsula League of Women Voters, Closson added that the secret budget totaling at least $35 billion is "nearly as large as the entire federal budget for health care and larger than the shares of the federal budget allocated to education, transportation, agriculture, and the environment."

Quoting the late Sen. Everett Dirkson, Closson remarked, "A billion here, a billion there—and pretty soon you get into big bucks." He estimated $13,000 as the cost to the Average American household for military projects over the past six years.

Remarking that corporate America has been "seduced and then addicted" by the prospect of great profits on the military bandwagon, Closson recommended that concerned citizens begin to see Economic Conversion as "something that creates opportunities rather than problems — opportunities to really strengthen our economy, strengthen our society, and indeed enhance our national security."

The Center for Economic Conversion is a non-profit research organization that studies means for the orderly redirection of resources now employed in military activities to civilian growth industries.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Choose life

I REMEMBER that spring day like it was yesterday, although it was almost 20 years ago that I was finishing my senior year at Grossmont High School in the suburban town of La Mesa, in Southern California.

During that time, my friends and I were experiencing the feelings that accompany the transition from the prison-like conditions of high school to the free world of adulthood. We were happy, cocky, impatient and, most of all, scared. But nobody wanted to admit that, we were too smug for that.

Each of us reacted differently to the unknown pressures that awaited us in the real world. Some students buried themselves in school work preparing for college while others turned to drugs, trying to deny the fact that a new phase of life awaited them.

But I also remember 17-year-old Jackie Finney's solution to the situation. He went into my friend Harry's kitchen and put a shotgun in his mouth and pulled the trigger.

Jackie died and the rest of us wondered what went wrong.

Nobody wanted to really accept the reality that a young life had been wasted, destroyed in a way that would impact us for the rest of our lives.

Even the coroner tried to make us believe that Jackie had died a peaceful death. In the open casket at the funeral service, Jackie's face looked like wax — nice try folks, but the truth was undeniable. Jackie's face, like his life, was gone forever.

For the rest of the school year, as we readied ourselves for graduation, Jackie's name came up from time to time. Most often it was with sadness that he would not be there with us as we went on with our lives.

We were also angry that Jackie had not taken us into consideration before killing himself — what a completely selfish act.

For Harry, who discovered his best friend Jackie after he heard the blast of the shotgun, life was never the same. His family took him out of school for a month and put him in a hospital so he could put his world together again.

When he came back to school he was quiet. Harry was never the rah-rah type, but now he walked as if in a bad dream from which he could not awaken.

As high school ended, the students went their separate ways. The crowd I hung out with struggled for a direction; it was not easy growing up then as it is not easy growing up now.

And years later, after almost two decades have passed, I still think of Jackie Finney occasionally. I wish he had decided to stick with it, to go through the madness of life with the rest of us.

He didn't need to die, just like the teenagers of today needn't kill themselves over problems they feel are too large and too impossible to overcome.

There is help; there is a way to work through the bad times. Don't commit an impulsive act that will not only stop your life, but will also permanently mar the lives of those around you.

I wish Jackie had thought of that — I wish Jackie had lived. He'd be coming up on a birthday about now.

Water board to take big step toward dam EIR

By NANCY HILLS

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Water Management District next week is expected to move an important step toward completion of an environmental impact report on the New San Clemente Dam.

At a special meeting April 30, the water management board is scheduled to vote on final dam sizes and project descriptions to be comprehensively reviewed in the EIR.

The New San Clemente Dam is meant to provide adequate water storage for the peninsula until the year 2020.

The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, April 30 in Seaside City Council Chambers.

Once the dam sizes and descriptions are chosen, the many consultants and agencies involved in the EIR can focus their reports and conclusions on what effects each size and type of project will have on cost, the environment, growth, construction and drought protection.

From those reports, the water board will select the specific dam size for an "advisory vote" in November 1987.

That ballot will ask district voters if they favor an approximately $43 million dam as a water supply project to meet the peninsula's demand until the year 2020.

After the advisory vote, the district will submit the project next year to the state Water Resources Control Board for a permit and then back to the voters for a bond election.

If approved, and if there are no lawsuits or unforseen difficulties, the dam could be completed in 1993.

The bond election will take place after the state water permit process because the state could change the project during its own review.

The April 30 meeting is a culmination of many workshops conducted by the water management district, at which numerous alternatives, dam sizes, locations and combinations of water supply projects were compared and screened out.

Criteria the board used in the process included:

- Total cost of the project.
- Cost per acre foot.
- Total yield of the water supply from the project.
- Drought reserve.
- Degree of environmental enhancement the project would supply, particularly for the Carmel River.
- Reliability of supply.

The same criteria will be used in the April 30 meeting to determine dam sizes and project combinations for the final draft of the EIR.

Demand projections used to estimate each dam size performance is based on consumption in the year 2020. The 2020 demand calculations are growth projections derived from the six cities and portion of Monterey County in the district. The projections were completed about a year ago.

Alan Williams, a Carmel contractor and sometimes spokesman for Carmel on water issues, has expressed concern about the demand projections. Williams has said he believes that changes in demographics, which indicate an increase in household sizes, will continue to push consumption per meter upward.

The district, Williams said, has not sufficiently taken that factor into account and fears it will make the dam obsolete before it is even built.

THE BOARD, explained district project coordinator Henrietta Stern, will consider a dam up to 29,000 acre feet of water storage to the smallest size of 20,000 acre feet.

An important question the board must answer is whether it is worth the time and money to analyze an intermediate size dam — 24,000 acre feet or 25,000 acre feet dam, she said.

The 29,000 acre feet dam is the largest size the district can apply for from the state Water Resources Control Board. The previous water board submitted that size to the state and changing it now, according to district General Manager Bruce Buel, would create a significant delay in bringing the dam "on-line."

The performanee of all dam sizes, Stern said, will be cosidered in conjunction with new pumps California-American Water Co. intends to install as a part of its five-year-plan.

The board will also consider the largest and smallest dams without the wells, she said.

A portion of the water stored in the dam will be taken directly from the dam to supply the district and a portion will be released to refill the Carmel Valley aquifer and restore the Carmel River environment.

Water released from the dam to restore the aquifer will be available to Cal-Am's Carmel Valley pumps.

Environmental concerns include timed releases to regenerate the steelhead fish population. At a meeting April 14, the board voted to include fish passage facilities to carry the steelhead over the dam to spawn and back downstream to the ocean and not include a hatchery as part of the EIR.

The district has been negotiating with California Department of Fish and Game on a solution to preservation of the steelhead run.

Fish and Game, which wishes to preserve the "run" in as natural a state as possible, could sue the district if it is dissatisfied with the project, holding the dam's completion up for years.

The board will also define a "no-project" description, as required by state law. The "no-project" analysis calculates the effect on the water supply system if there is no dam built.

The board will also analyze what other future water supply projects, apart from the dam, can reasonably expected to be completed by the year 2020. Those projects include a reclamation plant and new wells from Cal-Am.

City council to hold three special meetings on Friday

By DAVID LELAND

THE CARMEL City Council will meet three, count 'em three, times in as many special meetings to be held Friday, April 24 in the council chambers in City Hall.

The first meeting at 10:30 a.m. will address a resolution amending the city's 1986-87 budget and will also clarify the city's position concerning the county's extension of its emergency water ordinance.

During February's council meeting, the city council heard the mid-year budget review, which contained several changes which needed further study.

Those budget matters will now come before members Friday. They include:

- A contribution of $10,000 to the Holman Highway Task Force.
- A contribution of $300 to the American Legion for a bronze plaque for World War II veterans at Devendorf Park.
- A request from the city recreation department for $8,459 for office furniture and computer equipment.
- Acquisition of two projectors for Sunset Center.
- Appropriations of $11,700 for public safety equipment.
- Transfer of $88,000 in funds for the construction of a seawall at 12th Avenue.

At the early meeting the city will also take a position on Monterey County's water conservation ordinance passed last week.

On April 15, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors passed an extension of its emergency water ordinance prohibiting new development that would increase water consumption use in the Cal-Am service area, with some exceptions.

These include new building on existing single-family lots for family homes and guest, caretaker or senior citizen houses as part of such development.

THE NEXT installment of the city council will occur that afternoon at 1, when the council hears a report on the city's parking dilemma.

The traffic and parking study is part two of the Three Phase Implementation Plan prepared for the city by Denise Duffy and Associates, a Monterey-based firm.

Phase One of the plan evaluated existing parking conditions in the downtown area and assessed parking needs for the city. Phase One was submitted to the city last year and has been used by the General Plan Committee in updating the traffic section of the general plan's revisions.

The meeting will include presentations by Duffy and traffic engineers Wilbur Smith and Associates.

The discussions will focus on parking needs and proposed alternatives to solve existing parking problems. In addition, the projected impacts of alternatives will be presented.

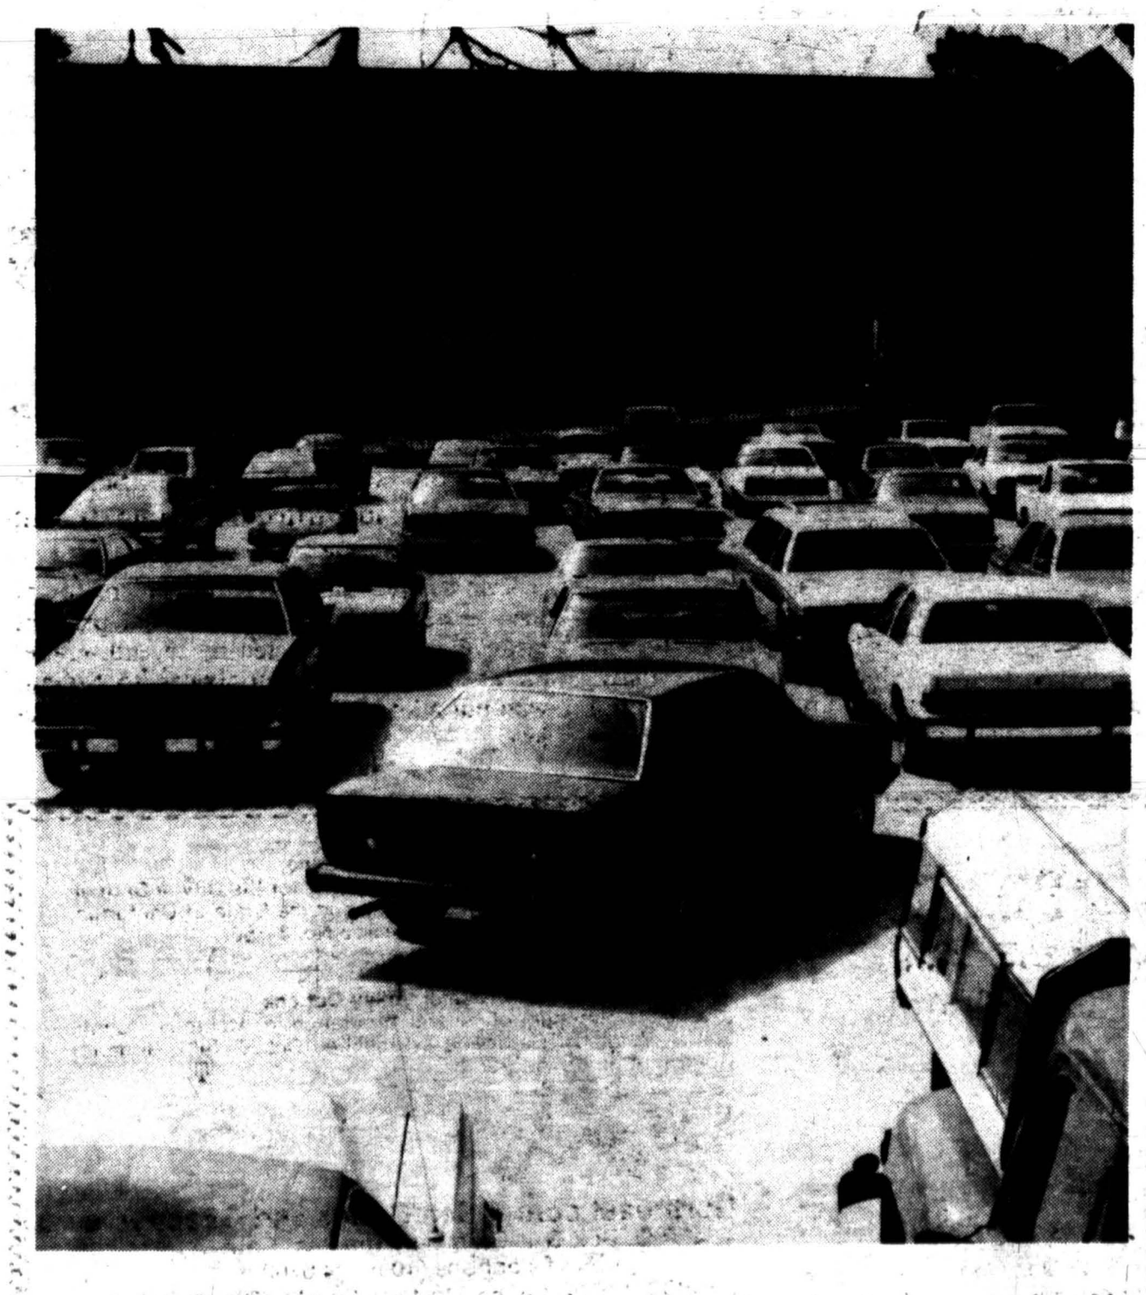
Actions to be addressed at the meeting will include: a parking structure at Sunset Center, satellite parking areas within the downtown area and parking management options, such as permit parking.

The final meeting at 3 that afternoon will be concerned with disbanding the city's non-profit Civic Improvement Corp.

The Civic Improvement Corp. was formed to raise money for the $678,750 purchase of four lots of the Gamble estate in 1985.

Since the city had always planned to sell the lots and state law says that city councils may only buy property for public use, the individual members of the council incorporated themselves into a non-profit organization. The organization raised the money through the purchase of tax-exempt certificates.

But now there is no use for the corporation and it is expected that councilmembers will approve dissolution of the partnership.



ALWAYS A problem in Carmel, parking issues will be addressed at Friday's 3 p.m. Carmel City Council meeting. Sunset Center's north parking lot, shown here, will be under discussion for a proposed parking structure. The council will also meet at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Settlement imminent on Carmel's lawsuit against water allocation

By NANCY HILLS

MAY DAY might bring more than spring celebration for both the city of Carmel and the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District.

On May 1, the two governmental agencies could announce a settlement to a lawsuit filed by Carmel against the district's water allocation system. Carmel filed the lawsuit in November 1986.

The water management district board will vote on the settlement April 30 and Carmel City Council will vote April 24, both in closed session, whether to accept the agreement, according to spokesmen for each agency. Both parties agreed to wait until May 1 to make an announcement.

Carmel exceeded in 1986 its annual water allotment from the district by 0.4 percent and imposed a moratorium on building which would increase water consumption in the city. Carmel's water use has dropped since November and is now under the allotment.

However, if the city has exceeded it again by the water board's annual review in September, the district is mandated to impose its own water connection moratorium in Carmel.

A proposed solution was worked out April 15 and 16 at settlement conferences with lawyers and representatives for both agencies and with Monterey Superior Court Judge Richard Silver present.

"No one won and no one lost," said water district General Manager Bruce Buel.

However, he said, no details could be released until the May 1 date.

"It hasn't been written down yet," water board chairman Dick Heuer said, "but I don't anticipate a problem with my board."

A court date for the lawsuit was set for April 29, but that has been continued until after May 1 and will be dropped if both parties agree to the settlement.

Not even Carmel is immune to teenage suicide

sion with problems becoming magnified and options seeming to disappear.

The important thing is to not act on impulse.

"A successful suicide is a non-recoverable act," cautions Bruchard. "The message is to put it off and get some help."

Help. That is the one thing that most people are looking for when they attempt suicide. It is up to friends and family to be on the lookout for telltale signs.

"About 80 percent of suicidal people give friends and family clear clues about their intention to kill themselves," says Edwin Shneidman, a professor of thanatology at University of California at Los Angeles.

"It is a sad fact that suicides are not essentially acts of hostility or revenge," he continues. "But are individuals' attempts to get others to see their pain and stop them from killing themselves."

Some characteristics of people at risk for suicide are: depression, impulsive behavior, family disruption, past psychiatric illness in parent, recent death of a friend, feeling unwanted by the family, exposure to violence at home and talking about life being meaningless.

The Suicide Prevention Center treats each call seriously, says Jim Stoll, executive director, in a flier published by that agency.

"It is a myth that people who talk about suicide do not try it," the flier states. "If a person is bringing up the idea of suicide, take it as a serious warning."

But many adults do not understand why a person in his high school years would contemplate such a desperate act.

Stoll says that most teens who contact the Suicide Prevention Center, which operates 24-hours daily at no charge, are feeling helpless, not doing well in school, are feeling no potential for the future or are having alcohol and drug problems.

"(These) kids just see no place for themselves in the world," he says. "They see each day as one of pain."

The center averages 100 calls a week of which 10 to 20 are from youngsters, says Stoll.

FOR MANY youngsters alcohol and drugs, which began as a way to stop emotional pain, often ends up as an enemy, driving them to suicide.

Robin Whiteman, a junior at Carmel High School, tells of a 14-year-old relative who slashed her wrists repeatedly when drunk.

"Nobody knew why," she says, "but one year later she did it again. She tried two or three times — always the same way — it was like a cry for help," says Whiteman.

That story, however, has a happy ending with the woman ending up in Alcoholics Anonymous.

One thing is for sure, alcohol is a depressant drug, which can make a person's lows seem lower than they really are.

"When you use drugs or alcohol, your mind is not clear," says Burchard.

But it is not only drugs and alcohol that can be blamed for teenage despondency, says Stoll.

"Personally, I don't rate it (alcohol) up at the top," he says. "People like to dispense the problem with that, but I don't think that's all of the problem."

What appears to happen in most cases of attempted suicide is the normal feelings that accompany growing up become exacerbated by problems such as incest and dysfunctional family systems.

"Fifteen is an age when all those feelings are in you," says Carmel High junior Jen Griffon. "You don't know who you are, what will happen after high school and a lot of things are confusing."

Griffon is no stranger to suicide; a little over a year ago a close friend hung herself.

'A successful suicide is a non-recoverable act,' cautions Tom Bruchard, an expert on adolescent issues. 'The message is to put it off and get some help.'

Griffon said she was taken aback when her friend hung herself — this was the last thing she expected.

"I always viewed her as someone that was really happy," Griffon remembers. "We always talked and she never held anything back. She never seemed like that kind of person."

It may be hard to figure out who "that kind of person" is for a youngster, but experts have been able to nail down the logic which accompanies a suicidal act.

"Suicide, I have learned, is not a bizarre and incomprehensible act of self-destruction," says Schneidman, in At the Point of No Return, a paper in which he talks of suicide.

"Rather, suicidal people use a particular logic, a style of thinking that brings them to the conclusion that death is the only solution to their problems."

Pain, Shneidman says, is what the suicidal person seeks to escape. In working with a suicidal person, reducing whatever is causing distress will lower the suffering.

The problem for many youngsters, such as Becky, is that they are having problems within the family and there is no easy way out of the situation.

Shneidman also says that suicide is a search for a solution.

"Suicide is not random," he says. "It is never done pointlessly or without a purpose. It is a way out of a problem, a crisis, an unbearable situation."

This can be seen in Becky's plea for help as she talks of killing herself.

"Everybody's leaning on me," she says. "I don't care what happens to me, I just want out."

Perhaps the most common denominator in suicide is the feeling of powerlessness and impotence that no one can help with this pain and there is nothing to do but commit suicide.

"I don't have anywhere to turn, everywhere I go I'm running," says Becky.

WHEN ADOLESCENTS call the Suicide Prevention Center they reach a trained professional who is well versed in looking for the telltale signs that Shneidman outlines.

But Stoll at suicide prevention says the first and foremost order is to establish if the caller has a plan to carry out the act.

"We are very direct with people when they call on the phone," says Stoll, who worked five years at San Francisco General Hospital handling suicide cases. "We ask 'Do you have a plan, when and what might help?' "

Stoll says the procedures range from simple to the drastic.

"Sometimes it's adequate just to talk," he says. "To take time out and explore the options of life."

The next level of help is counselor referral or another appropriate agency.

If a person calling the prevention center is termed to be an emergency, the crisis worker takes further steps.

"If people are in serious trouble callback arrangements are made," says Stoll. "We make sure there is someone on top of the situation."

Stoll says the Suicide Prevention Center also provides speakers for county high schools to help educate the youngsters on warning signs.

Next fall, with the help of a federal grant, Stoll plans to carry a new program into county schools called Adolescent Suicide Awareness Project, which is named after Ryerson's office in New Jersey.

Operating since 1981, the program is being used in about 70 schools throughout the nation, says Ryerson.

'I feel helpless, like there's nowhere to go,' says 'Becky' tearfully, as she talks to three fellow students plus counselor Judith Wolfe about suicide. 'You can't go through the wall and you can't go around it.'

"School systems are the best early warning place to identify youngsters who are at risk for self-destructive behavior," says Ryerson.

The program attempts to educate all school employees and students on how to recognize and help a person who is heading toward suicide.

Ryerson says there are six major points that the curriculum touches on. These are: facts, warning signs, nature of depression in adolescents, causes, what you can do to help and where you can get help outside the school.

The only cost, she says, is about $2,000 for materials and these can be shared between schools. There is also the initial expense of training the community professionals who charge for their time.

The class is presented throughout five or six class periods. And after the initial training, there are 10 educators at each school who are able to teach new students the program.

General Plan revision hearing set for Saturday

By NANCY HILLS

SATURDAY IS another Carmel General Plan day.

The Carmel Planning Commission will continue its public hearings on the proposed changes in the general plan starting 9 a.m., Saturday, April 25 in Carpenter Hall at Sunset Center.

The commission and General Plan Review Committee will continue the public discussion, begun April 15, on the text portion of the plan.

The commission will start the Saturday session with the Circulation Element text and then will move on to the Housing Element. If time permits, the other elements will be discussed in order.

The narrative text provides supportive information for the changes in the goals, objectives and policies sections of the elements.

Deletions and additions to the Circulation Element text include:

• Deletion of references to the Hatton Canyon Freeway project.

• Changes in discussions on parking in the city with updates from the Denise Duffy report.

The text suggests that the planning commission identify "suitable sites for off-street parking to be acquired and should prepare appropriate design guidelines for these sites. The city council could then initiate action to obtain preliminary design drawings and estimated construction costs and could decide whether the project should be financed by in-lieu fees, creation of a parking district, or eliminated from consideration because of costs or other factors."

"The community has supported the concept of public parking ... and providing more public parking opportunities. A minority are opposed to any more parking because they think more parking will attract more visitors" is an added portion of the text.

A map of possible parking sites is included.

• Changes in the dicussions on tour buses in Carmel. The number of buses in Carmel on a peak day was changed from 250 to 200 to "fewer than 35" The "loop pattern" the buses must use through Carmel, the proposed change states, "doubles the tour bus traffic through Carmel."

• Maintaining in-lieu parking fees for new development that cannot provide spaces is retained.

Changes in the Housing Element center around second kitchens or, as the committee refers to them, "subordinate units."

Legalization of these units and an amnesty period for owners of existing units to file for permits is supported.

The text suggests that subordinate units be used as a way to meet affordable housing needs in Carmel.

References to the development of Senior Citizen Housing Project on Dolores Street and Fifth Avenue are retained, though the number of units is increased from 15 to 30.

Fashion fund-raiser set for April 24

A FASHION show extravaganza featuring everything from beachwear to formalwear will be held by the Carmel High School Fashion Program Friday.

The Masquerade Fashion Show will be held at 7 p.m. Friday, April 24 at the Monterey Conference Center's Serra Ballroom. The show is produced by Carmel, Pacific Grove and Seaside high school students in the Carmel ROP fashion merchandising program.

Clothing for the show is being provided by Contempo and Miller's Outpost in Del Monte Center, and On the Beach and Dick Bruhn's in Carmel.

Education was life's work

Sandy Swain always elicited strong opinions

By NANCY HILLS

SOME PEOPLE vehemently disagreed with her. Some people vehemently agreed with her.

And many people didn't know enough about her to judge her, but did anyway.

Marieta "Sandy" Swain died April 18, early Saturday morning, and Carmel lost someone who had become one of its most controversial, and for many, loved citizens.

Swain was known for her directness, honesty, humor and loyalty to friends and her beliefs.

She was born Aug. 13, 1924 in San Francisco, and grew up in Northern California. She moved to Carmel in 1974 from Dallas where she and her beloved friend and companion for 33 years, Natalie Murray, founded the Lamplighter School.

MARIETA "SANDY" Swain with her two of her most cherished friends, Bambi (left) and Samantha. Swain, many years a Carmel Planning Commissioner, died Saturday, April 18.

Swain became the center of city debate when on the eve of her 10th year on the Carmel Planning Commission, she and the rest of the commission were "fired" by then recently-elected Mayor Clint Eastwood.

She had served on that commission under four city mayors, starting with Gunnar Norberg, and had just been re-elected for her fourth term as commission chairwoman. Already ill from the cancer that would eventually kill her, she had reluctantly accepted the position.

She was hurt that she never received any formal explanation for her removal from the commission. The city also never formally recognized her for her years of service except a brief resolution of commendation from the planning commission.

"I admired what she believed in and stood for," Councilman James Wright said. "I think she wanted to perserve the 'Carmel way of life' and was interested in keeping it as residential as possible. I think she wanted to be fair. And she was genuinely interested in the business people.

"She was a very private person and more interested in drawing other people out than talking about herself," he said.

During her time on the planning commission Swain fought for what she believed in — Carmel as a village — tiny, homey, and pristine.

In doing so, she made her share of enemies. "Everytime you gored an ox, you made someone angry," she said in an interview about a year ago.

That wasn't always easy, she said. Some people would cross the street rather than talk to her after the city was rezoned by the 1984 general plan which Swain worked on extensively.

"By nature, I'm a very gregarious person. I like people and I want them to like me," she said.

But Carmel was changing despite her tenure on the commission.

"I think we're getting shiny and bright instead of kind of quaint and country," Swain said. "May it's a change of the times, but there're several stores in town with such far-out displays that it just boggles my mind, but this is not the Carmel I would like to see. I deplore the cardboard signs that denote sales that are up there all year long."

She remained to the end an outspoken critic of the current proposed changes to the general plan.

AS IMPORTANT as the planning commission may have seemed to those who knew Swain in Carmel, it was her other role she played in Dallas that was the most important in her life.

There Swain and Murray in 1953 founded The Lamplighter School at an old farm.

Swain had received her masters in education at San Francisco State University where she met Murray, a native of Texas. Together they dreamed of opening a private school.

The school flourished and from its original count of 23 students grew to 700 and the old farm is now a $4 million facility.

The school's motto, found by Swain and Murray on a door of a Baptist church, stated "A Student is not a vessel to be filled, but a Lamp to be Lighted."

The teaching stresses the development of self-esteem and a lifelong love of learning, said Margaret Charlton, a Lamplighter board member and friend of Swain's.

"She was certainly one of the leading educators in Dallas," Charlton said. "The school attracted the top educators in the country."

"She gave people confidence in themselves and made each child feel they could do anything. She gave them self-esteem," added Emily Charlton, Margaret's daughter and a former student of Swain's.

Two Carmelites have answer to tourists' questions

By MAC McDONALD

"CAN YOU tell me how to get to the Hog's Breath?"

That oft-asked question has dogged Carmel residents and shopkeepers for the past several years, even more so in the past year. Of course it's not the only question outsiders ask, it's just the most ubiquitous. "How do you get to Carmel Beach?" or "Where's the Mission?" are probably also high on the list.

These and other questions have been asked so many times (and answered almost by rote by now) they've prompted a response from two enterprising Carmelites. They've come up with something called "Carmel-by-the-Sea: A Cassette Tour," which features a cassette tape you pop into your car stereo and a handy reference map for a self-guided 40-minute, six-mile tour around the village and its environs.

"There are so many thousands of people asking questions, we figured, 'Why not give them something so they don't have to ask so many questions,' " says Care Terkelson, who's been a 10-year resident of the city.

Terkelson concocted the tape with her partner Pat Hampson Gillooly, a 20-year resident and teacher who works nights at Books Inc. on Ocean Avenue, a prime location to run into curious question askers.

"We saw a need for it," says Terkelson, "so we just brianstormed with each other."

Coming up with the idea was the easy part according to Terkelson, who works as a supervisor of student teachers at Chapman College.

"We thought it'd be real easy and fast," she admits. "But it got to be quite an ordeal."

Terkelson and Hampson found out quickly that you just don't stuff a map of Carmel and a tape made on your portable boom box into a tape case and call it a day. Other such enterprises have been attempted over the years, but few have caught on (have you seen any others around?)

There was research to do, books on Carmel to read, maps to consult, interviews with locals to conduct (prime consultant was former Carmel mayor Barney Laiolo), and little things to take care of, such as...timing.

"Getting the timing down," was the hardest part of the project, says Terkelson. "We had to get it right so they weren't getting two blocks ahead of themselves.

"We also had it 'proofed' by people in the community," she adds. "We asked people to take the tour and give us feedback, both positive and negative. We revised it several times."

The entire tour, which starts and ends at Devendorf Park, takes about 40 minutes, longer if you decide to stop and take in the sights instead of merely passing them, and depending on the whims of traffic.

But what if the guidee gets lost?

"They won't," Terkelson says without hesitation. "There's a map with it."

But if for some unknown reason (knowing the driving habits of tourists) they just happen to get lost, they can always "go in fast reverse (backtrack) and look at the map, or just park the car, get out and enjoy it," she says.

The tour, which the tape dubs "A native's version of a Carmel tour," takes in such familiar landmarks as the aforementioned Hog's Breath, Jack London's, Bud's Pub and General Store (Carmel's version of Pebble Beach's famed "Whiskey Route" perhaps?); the Carmel Post Office (a Carmel institution if there ever was one); Tuck Box, Pine Inn, City Hall, Harrison Memorial Library, Golden Bough, La Playa Hotel, Tor House, Carmel Beach, Mission Ranch, Carmel Mission, Sunset Center, Mission Trail Park, Forest Theater, Nielsen's, Bruno's and Med Market (what other town has markets as landmarks?); and Carmel Plaza.

There's also a few lesser known (at least to outsiders) landmarks, such as the Frank Lloyd Wright house, Marchen-Haus, Carmel River School, and Red Eagle Lane.

The taped tour, however, doesn't just point out the landmarks, but offers thumbnail histories, behind-the-scenes tidbits and a little dose of local lore and legend.

For example, there's the story about Carmel's first (and apparently only) jury trial, held in 1947 in the church building now occupied by city hall. Seems an inebriated gentleman drove in reverse down Ocean Avenue one evening and crashed into someone's home. He blamed the city on the accident, citing the village's lack of street lighting. They tossed him out on his ear.

Soothing background music on the tape is performed by peninsula pianist Jonathan Lee. Terkelson adds there's also a "bonus" to purchasers of the tape.

"In order to make people enjoy it when they get home, we have selections by Lee on the back (reverse side of tape)," Terkelson says. "All the songs except one were written by him."

The cover is a photograph (by Lee Hocker) of the famous Bill Bates mural next to Nielsen's Market.

The tape goes for $9.95 at several Carmel locations, including Books Inc. (of course), Fortier's, Carmel Drug Store, Nielsen's, Bruno's, Brentano's, Highlands Inn, Pilgrim's Way and Thunderbird Bookshops.

And if the tourist is on foot Terkelson claims they can still utilize the tape.

"If they're in good shape — it's only six miles — they could walk it."

At 15 miles per hour of course.

Carmel Monterey Travel offers cruise specialist

Carmel Monterey Travel has a cruise specialist.

Buying a cruise in today's changing market requires the use of a real expert. As in the airline industry, the cruise business is in the process of change. Cruise lines merge, new ships and competition in pricing are a few of the areas that are causing an increasing number of leisure travelers to look for personalized professional help with their travel planning.

Carmel Monterey Travel has evolved into the largest travel agency on the Central Coast. With increased size they now have the buying power to be price competitive without sacrificing the personalized, caring service that is so important in planning a cruise.

Introducing Don Joy...

We chose to profile our oldest employee, not in years of age, but in years of service. Joy, who joined in 1964, is our Cruise Director.

If there is anything you want to know about any cruise or any ship worth sailing, ask Don. Chances are, he has been aboard them himself or knows someone whose opinion he trusts who has been. He will also tell you which ships to avoid.

"Ships have personalities," he says. "It starts with the captain's approach and is reflected in the entire crew. My job, as I see it, is to match the personality of my clients to that of the ship — make sure they will be compatible and happy."

Don, a veteran of cruise companies such as Matson Lines, Italian Line, and American Export, loves cruising himself. He likes the idea of a one-stop vacation; no checking in and out every day or two.

"The ship is your hotel and takes you where you want to go. You always get to see the highlights, and with optional side trips you can cover all the cultural events in the countries you visit."

Experience the sun, fun during tour of Santa Fe

Do you enjoy good music, fine craftsmanship, tasty regional cooking, and the haunting beauty of the high desert country? Santa Fe, located amid rich cultures and exquisite landscapes is our destination in August for a week filled with Grand Opera, chamber music, and the best of the arts of the Southwest.

This community — a century old when the United States was founded — still charms with narrow streets lined with adobe and territorial architecture and its unique blend of Spanish and Indian cultures.

Enjoy a week in this lovely area with first-class accommodations close by the historic central plaza. Partake of special meals in historic settings. Visit the ancient Taos pueblo and wander the colorful Indian Market where prize-winning wares have been selected for display and purchase.

Navajo artists offering jewelry and weavings, the fine baskets of the Hopi, and the famous pottery of the Santo Domingo, Santa Clara, and Hopi pueblos. The finest of New Mexico's native arts are gathered for this festive weekend.

Of course, the prominent feature of this special tour is the opportunity to attend outstanding opera and chamber music performances. The magic of the Santa Fe community lends itself to the production of Grand Opera which has been a part of this lovely setting for over 30 years.

The Chamber Music Festival, now in its 15th season, celebrates this year the centennial of Georgia O'Keefe, with offerings by Beethoven, Mozart, Schumann, and Strauss. Soloists include pianist Peter Frankl and violinist Ani Kavafian, both of whom have appeared at the Carmel Bach Festival. Also featured is cellist Nathaniel Rosen.

Our visits to the dramatic opera house include choice seats for performances of Mozart's beloved comedy of manners, The Marriage of Figaro. A count with roving eyes for Figaro's young bride-to-be is thwarted at every turn by conniving servants and a forgiving wife.

A private tea and visit backstage previews our second opera, Handel's Ariodante, a story of deception and betrayal leading to chivalry and love.

Our last performance is Puccini's poignant Madame Butterfly. This masterpiece of Cio-Cio San's love for Lt. Pinkerton is enhanced in the eternal setting of Santa Fe's outdoor opera house. What a most fitting finale to our glorious trip to the Southwest!

This is a special tour carefully planned to make this a memorable experience for those who enjoy fine music and the unique culture of our Southwest. Come with us and experience the best of Santa Fe.

Sandy Swain devoted life to Carmel and education

Swain's brother Fred Swain of Concord, Mass. said she loved to write poems for the children:

My daddy gave me his hat to wear and you couldn't see me anywhere

and:

The most wonderful place to be is the place that's special just for me

were two examples of the little two-liners she enjoyed creating, he said.

"She was such a dear, dear friend. She would just give and give and never ask anything for herself. She'd just walk in the room you'd hear her warm laugh and feel good," Maragaret Charlton said.

"She wasn't controversial about children," she added. "She just loved them."

Swain also generated those feelings in the ones who her knew best in Carmel.

"Everybody who really knew her loved and cared for her," said Michael Brown, owner of Perspectacles and a former city councilman. "She had that unique ability to make people feel welcome in her life. She never hurt anybody, never intentionally. She was always interested in you, even when she was going through the pain (of her caneer)."

She is survived by her brother Fred Swain of Concord; two nephews and a grand-nephew and grandniece. She requested no funeral services and will be buried in Dallas. A memorial service is planned at the Lamplighter School in Dallas at 10 a.m., Saturday, April 25.

The family asks that memorial contributions be sent to the Lamplighter School Scholarship Fund, c/o Mrs. Margaret Charlton, 11611 Inwood Road, Dallas, Texas 95229.

EDITORIAL
THE SOLDIER MEMORIAL

It's about time something was done to complete the Carmel soldier memorial begun with such a hurrah last Armistice Day, five months ago. The work in its present state is a disgrace and is the subject of frivolous and uncomplimentary remarks by residents and visitors.

Let it not be said that Carmel has forgotten those who served. If it is lack of funds, let's start something to raise the money. Let the committee who have the matter in charge tell the people what is wanted, and the people will provide.

PUBLIC INVITED TO VISIT AND INSPECT NEW FIREHOUSE

The new Carmel firehouse, at first a possibility, then a probability, is now an actuality.

Tomorrow afternoon and all day Sunday, the fire department is planning to hold open house at their new headquarters on Sixth Street, showing those who pay them a visit the fine new building, their uniforms and their fire apparatus.

There is still painting to be done and numerous odd jobs about the place will keep workmen occupied for several days, but the department decided that this week-end would be the appropriate time to hold their opening, and now the public is cordially invited to inspect the building from one end to the other.

An invitation is extended to all Carmel dogs who have not had rabies vaccinations for two or more years to come (accompanied by their owners) to receive their shots, and at the same time to obtain their new licenses. PLANNERS COMPLETE REPORT ON ALCOHOL

A land use committee report as fast as a telephone book was scheduled to be presented before the Carmel Planning Commission Wednesday afternoon. The subject was "Businesses Selling Alcoholic Beverages."

The massive report, part of a review requested by the city council in December after a moratorium was placed on businesses selling alcoholic beverages, recommends no change in the zoning ordinance.

CARMEL VALLEY RESIDENTS SUPPORT RIVER PROGRAM

A majority of Carmel Valley residents who responded to an opinion survey by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District favors a management program for the Carmel River.

Of 400 surveys mailed to randomly-selected voters along the river and in the watershed, a total of 157 were returned, Manager Bruce Buel said.

And 51 percent of those who expressed an opinion on a proposed $150,000 river management program favored the concept, Buel said. The results of the survey are to be presented to the board of directors at its May 10 meeting.

More input allowed for county LCP hearings

By DAVID LELAND

THE PUBLIC will have ample opportunity for further input into the draft of the Monterey County Local Coastal Implementation Plan, with the county planning commission scheduling a second hearing because of the large amount of correspondence.

When carried out, the coastal plan will put into action the Monterey County Land Use Plan and will give builders an opportunity to bypass the state Coastal Commission in the permit process.

Currently, when a person is seeking a building permit, he must first go to the county and then take his case before the Coastal Commission to see if it is compliance with coastal regulations.

The Coastal Plan will enable the county to issue coastal permits.

Initially, the planning commission only had one date set for public input. But it has now scheduled an additional hearing for 7 p.m., Wednesday, April 29, in the courthouse in Salinas.

It will also conduct a session closed to public testimony May 27. At that time, planners will respond to written correspondence and will forward a recommendation to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors, which must approve the plan before it can become law.

The deadline for written response to the coastal plan has been moved back to May 8 from April 29. Those letters should be directed to the planning staff in Salinas.

The planning staff has made every attempt to distribute the voluminous document for public scrutiny, but it appears there are too many people who have not had a chance to peruse the complicated report.

According to Bob Slimmon, county planning director, his staff posted 200 notices, distributed 150 copies of the plan and had it available in county libraries.

But still, the planning department was in the process last week of having a second printing runoff of the implementation plan.

"Additional time is needed if the public is to be given a meaningful opportunity to thoroughly review the hundreds of pages of highly technical...language," said Michael Caplin, representing the Coast Property Owners Association.

But Slimmon initially disagreed with the idea that county planners had not given the public an ample opportunity to familiarize themselves with the plan.

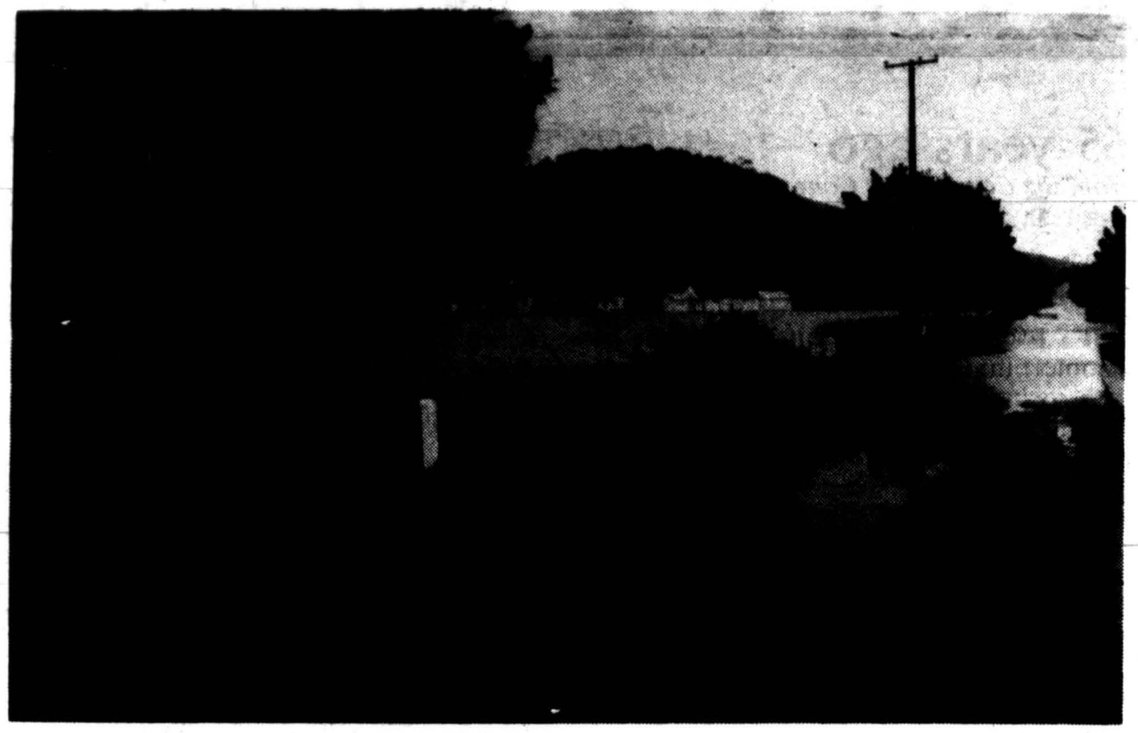
"It's obvious people have had time," Slimmon said. "I frankly take offense with Mike Caplin that we have not given people a chance (to respond)."

Adding his comments was Dale Ellis, county zoning administrator.

"Available doesn't mean you get to put it in your little hand and carry it home with you," he said, referring to the various locations available to view the document.

Nevertheless, Big Sur resident Paula Walling echoed public sentiment best.

"Compared to the four-page document that has protected the coast for the last 25 years, I find this document obtuse," she said.



PART OF the deal the Odellos struck with the county is to allow flood control to be directed over their property instead of The Crossroads side of the Carmel River. During one winter flood the Odello property found itself underwater, with floods spilling onto Highway 1.

This is the second go-round for the implementation plan, which was shelved by the board of supervisors last year.

The county planning staff began working in earnest on the new version of the plan last August, according to Bonnie Stibbe, county planner.

THE CITY of Carmel will not be directly affected by the coastal plan, which is a directive for the unincorporated areas of Carmel.

But indirect effects of the plan were voiced at last week's meeting by Dianne White, Carmel planning director.

Specifically, White expressed concern with the areas surrounding Carmel, such as Carmel Hills, Hatton Fields and Carmel Point. These areas are already under the sphere of the Carmel Land Use Plan.

These areas also fall under the coastal plan, which allows buildings to be as tall as 30 feet, which she feared would not protect the viewshed. The Carmel plan does not allow buildings that tall.

To offset any complications, White suggested the coastal plan be open to full public scrutiny before any building is permitted in an area that has substantial viewshed.

"Our recommendation is that the review process include public notification and opportunity for public comment prior to the time a permit is issued," she said. "In particular, the city would like to be notified of all such actions on property within our sphere of influence."

Carmel also came out in favor of the Odellos being given permits to build on their land located slightly south of the Carmel River on the east side of Highway 1.

The Odellos plan to subdivide what are now artichoke fields and build townhouses and an open-air market instead.

Since being excluded from the Carmel Valley Master Plan, the Odellos have been fighting with the county over the issuance of water permits because of drought-like conditions in the county.

"I don't want special treatment, I just want fair treatment," said Bruna Odello recently.

A breed apart

FOR SOME years now I have been living in New York City and visiting Carmel, California and have arrived at the point where I can claim to be something of an expert on both. One of the things I know now, however, is something I realized the first opportunity I had to compare them: that New Yorkers and Northern Californians are a breed apart.

My initial impressions of Carmel were the obvious, superficial ones. The inhabitants tended to look alike. A lot of them were blond. More often then not they seemed happy. And they appeared unnaturally healthy.

'What really separates New Yorkers from Carmelites is not appearance or speech or time zones or distance, but attitude. People in Carmel smile and say hello, even to strangers. They aren't always in a hurry. They actually walk for pleasure, not just to get from one place to another.'

I, on the other hand, am dark. I am a little the worse for wear. I have a serious, somewhat wary look, a demeanor painstakingly acquired over a long period of time — New York time — spent never knowing exactly what was around the next corner.

Then, too, New Yorkers are not homogeneous. New York has someone from everywhere. Walk through Times Square on a typical day and you will hear at least seven different languages, and that doesn't count the ones spoken by visitors. New Yorkers come in every imaginable shape and size and then some, since intermarriage has produced physical types found nowhere else on earth. New York is reputed to be the archetypal melting pot, but that is clearly untrue. Instead, it is hundreds of little pots simmering separately on the same great stovetop.

Which leads me to my subsequent discovery. What really separates New Yorkers from Carmelites is not appearance or speech or time zones or distance, but attitude. People in Carmel smile and say hello, even to strangers. They aren't always in a hurry. They actually walk for pleasure, not just to get from one place to another.

This is difficult for New Yorkers to understand. They know they will never accomplish all they have to do in one lifetime, so naturally they have to hurry. There are all those movies, all that theater to see, music to hear, books to read, better jobs to look for, lovers to find and abandon. I mean, it's a lot of work.

As I shuttled from one coast to another, I reflected on the revelations reported by Margaret Mead in Coming of Age in Samoa. I, too, was discovering the manners and mores of a tribe different from any I had known. There in Carmel were people whose young men took to the sea on flat pointed boards. They sat on them for hours, bobbing on the waves, until one that fit some unknown prerequisite came along, at which point they all bounded upright, rode a few feet and fell off.

How different this was from the rites of passage of young New York men. Their mettle was tested in great, subterranean chambers where they were subjected to a relentless barrage of pounding sound played at ear-shattering volume while blinding flashes of multi-colored light threatened both sight and equilibrium.

The young women, also, had entirely different patterns of behavior. In California it consisted primarily of lying nearly naked on the beach, pretending to ignore the boys on their boards while competing to see who could cover the most skin with the least material. In New York, harsher weather demanded more elaborate costumes which varied from one subgroup to another, but always within rigidly prescribed parameters. Most interesting, perhaps, was the social set whose identifying feature was hair dyed in brilliant shades of green, purple, orange and red, often all at the same time.

As I became more bi-coastal, I noticed how each group treated strangers. In Carmel I was an oddity, an exotic aberration viewed with curiosity and amusement, but someone who with sufficient exposure to the life of the west had a chance of becoming human. Californians, on the other hand, who came to New York, were simply ignored.

Of all the characteristics that I had put in my mental file, one came to symbolize for me the essential difference between east and west. In Carmel I was astonished to see that drivers automatically stopped to let pedestrians cross the street. Before I learned that this was accepted behavior, I almost mowed down several of the gentle folk.

In New York...well, let me give you an example. Recently I was at the corner of 53rd and Broadway. The light was against me and I was in my Carmel mode, so I stopped. I was the only one who did. The nearest car was a half block away, and pedestrians continued to cross as if the car was in the next country. As it approached the intersection, the driver accelerated, and so did the people crossing. Just before the car hurtled to the corner, one man shot in front of it and reached the opposite curb barely intact but without batting an eye or missing a beat.

I watched the scene in awe and admiration and said to myself, "That is a real New Yorker." And then I thought of Carmel and pictured the corner of Ocean and Dolores, one of the busiest streets in town, and imagined a man in a car slowly growing old as he patiently waited for the very last tourist to cross the street.

As the French say, "Vive la difference."

At the drop of a veil

MARIANNE ALIREZA started her talk at the Carmel Woman's Club with "Peace be upon you," a typical Arabian greeting, that she learned when she moved to Saudi Arabia as the bride of a young Saudi prince she had met at UC Berkeley.

Although she spoke no Arabic (and she said her first year abroad was hell), she stayed because her mother-in-law greeted her with "I love you as I love my son." And her extended family (of around 80 with whom she lived) gave her support and love with a sense of humor thrown in.

"Back in my days," she said referring to the 13 years she spent in a women's harem. "There was no electricity, we were short on water, camels were the main means of transportation, and there were only 56 miles of paved roads. That did not seem to matter, as women are not allowed to drive, or even to shop. (They still are not permitted to drive). In fact, there were no hotels, no restaurants, no theaters. My social life consisted of visiting other harems.

"Arabian women knew little of the country outside of Jedda and were completely unaware there was another world beyond Saudi."

However, she was accepted by her extended family and welcomed by them. Marianne found a basis in history of the Islamic faith for her Christian religion and she was never pressured about it. In fact, for her first Christmas there in 1945 her mother-in-law somehow found a Christmas tree and a turkey for her. "Of course, after that, they thought there was a tree with every Christian holiday."

A few months ago National Geographic asked her to go to Saudi Arabia with a staff photographer to do a story on "Women of Arabia." It will be out later this year. "The advancement for women is incredible. There is no feminist movement, women are just concentrating on education and doing what they can, and educating their children."

"I saw women working in hospitals totally unveiled and one woman pediatrician had a male receptionist. That's progress." she stated emphatically. "With education, women have found that they have a right to own property, to inherit, to own a business, to divorce with cause, to invest money. There are 18 women's banks working with international currencies. There are two new Safeway supermarkets in Jedda and I saw women shopping in them — some with husbands."

To emphasize the vast changes, Mrs. Alireza pointed out that the first school for girls was built in 1960 just two years before slavery was abolished.

Wearing an attractive red velvet Bedouin dress with jewelry, she said her husband was very supportive and helpful during that first trying year in Saudi Arabia. He had gone to school in England seven years before Berkeley and he had adjustments to make also. He divorced her after 15 years of marriage, she kidnapped her children and returned to raise and educate them here rather than to turn them over to wife number two. Now her children have all chosen to live in Saudi Arabia.

When she and the photographer arrived in Jedda, the young lady was surprised that a limo drove up to the plane for them and took them through the Royal Entrance where her 6-foot-tall son dressed as an Arabian sheik erupted with pure American speech. With a Polish-American mother who is one-quarter American Indian, her younger daughter is planning to be married with Indian feathers and beads. All are duly registered with the Indian Affairs Bureau in Oklahoma, certifying their Indian blood.

"There were no telephones in my day," she said. "Now my son dials my Pasadena number from his car cellular phone to tell me his latest Polish joke."

To demonstrate the change visually, she showed underwear of "her day" that she called, "one-size-fits-all Saudi hot pants," with an enormous waist to be drawn in and tied. "A loose woman in Saudi is one who has laxity in the drawstring," she said.

Mrs. Alireza has written a book At The Drop Of a Veil dedicated to those who call her "Oomie" (mother mine). She has two Mercedes given to her by her children. One license plate says "Veil" — the other "Unveil."

"I use the one that fits my mood," she says.

Although her children (and 14 grandchildren) live in Saudi, Arabia they all have homes in California and vacation here every year. She's a delightful lady with an intriguing story.

BURBANK STUDIO TOUR

As long as we were down south for the Academy Awards night we decided to see the studios where motion pictures are produced. Thus, we hired ourselves out to "beautiful downtown Burbank" as Johnny Carson calls it. We parked and were asked to wait in the lounge.

In a few minutes Dick Mason came in and sat down under posters of Clint Eastwood's Heartbreak Ridge and Sondra Locke's Ratboy. to welcome us to the VIP tour of Warner Brothers/Columbia Pictures studios. He said, "I personally set up this department 23 years ago as a technical and educational branch and since then we have had many people come through, including 32 heads of state.

"I am called a film historian and I lecture on a lot of different things — acting, finance, production, marketing and so forth. I have seen over 20,000 motion pictures and worked on over 1,200 major films.

"We have both WB and Columbia Pictures (competitors) who have been sharing the facilities for the past 15 years. This is the third home for WB (founded in 1912), who acquired this land in 1930. Until 1967 it was run by the sole surviving Warner brother, Jack, who retired in 1967 at the age of 75 (he died in '78). Jack Warner was a one-man operation," said Dick with the authority of 29 years of seniority. "One phone call from him and you worked at WB or one phone call and you no longer worked here. Those days are gone."

Columbia (founded in 1920) moved here in 1972 and the name of the studio was changed to TBS — simply, The Burbank Studios. There are two pieces of land — larger one is 108 acres with 33 stages and four blocks down Hollywood Way is "The Ranch" with five more stages and on 41 acres.

"There is no set route. You will take an informal, spontaneous look — nothing is set up," Dick assured us as he turned us over to our attractive young guide Amy, who took us by golf cart to the entrance of the oldest set on the lot — "New York Street."

Since this is movie make-believe, we have also seen this street redone with variations as Paris, Rome, San Francisco, Vienna, Hollywood and Moscow.

The walking tour began with a hike to the next set that has been around since 1941. "Kings Row" was built for stars Ronald Reagan and Ann Sheridan. As we walked into Midwest Town, The Music Man, automatically came to mind and even Hennessey Street used for Annie conjoured up memories.

In the sound studio ($8 million dollars in equipment) we watched as editors synchronized the soundtrack for Lost Boys starring Dianne Wiest (Oscar winner) and Keifer Sutherland (Donald's son) to be released in July.

We just missed an interior scene for the Mike Hammer episode "Mike's Daughter," but caught up with Stacey Keech and crew in a garage filled with yellow cabs with plates from various cities.

The property barns filled with $20 million worth of property collected over the past 60 years were fascinating. Chandeliers must be crystal for photographic purposes, so you are seeing the real thing in those posh scenes such as the 3,000-pounder in My Fair Lady hanging next to six large lamps made for the latest Barbara Streisand movie Nuts.

TBS employees from 51 different unions make up a city all by itself. Bank of America is open only on paydays, but the commissary, bike shop (few cars allowed), and bike repair shop are open five days a week. The guards (130 in total) are snappily dressed, polite and thoughtful.

Now that costs are about the same here as for location shooting, the studios are experiencing an upsurge in production. Schedules are about equally divided between TV series and movies, plus 125 national commercials a year, records, and TV specials.

Just down the street is a popular eating spot used by stars and studio personnel — The Copper Penny. We saw no big names — they must have been still celebrating Oscar night.

If you go, remember the city of Burbank itself has no dancing and no late-night spots. No one at the studio knew the population of the town — just that 4,300 people work at The Burbank Studios.

HAPPY PASTELS BY JOAN MURPHY

Being a popular artist Joan Murphy's fans came from various parts of the country when she brought her latest works to Zantman Art Gallery in Carmel.

Ms. Murphy paints in soft pastel colors that seem to be an invitation to sit in wicker chairs on a sunny terrace filled with flowers and view bya water. Her inspiration came from Tiburon, Sausalito, the San Francisco Bay, as well as the Mediterranean area resulting in paintings that are warm, peaceful and happy reflections of the beauties of the world. The show was a complete sellout. Ah well, for those who were disappointed, there will be another show in the future.

Student exchange program to celebrate 26th year

THE CARMEL Chapter of AFS International/Intercultural Programs will be celebrating 26 years in Carmel with a fund raiser April 30.

The fund raiser will begin with a buffet dinner at 6:30 p.m. and a theater performance at 8, Thursday, April 30 at the California First Theatre in Monterey. Seating is limited so reservations must be made by Friday, April 24. For more information or to make reservations call 625-1091 or 372-1666.

The Carmel chapter is hosting the largest number of students in its history this year; four students from abroad are attending high school this year and five Carmel High students will be either spending the summer or all year abroad. They include:

Andi Muller from Bamberg, West Germany. He is living with Jerry and Karen Pullen and their two daughters, Janine and Renee.

Irwan Tantu from Ujung-Pandang, Indonesia. He is living with Jim and Karen Baker and their son, John, and daughter, Kathy.

Lara De Zuzio from Bienne, Switzerland who is living with John and Pat Ostarello, and Joana Fernandes from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil who is living with Dick and Amelia Franke and their son, Evan and daughters Hailey and Tana.

All families are active in AFS activities and the students participate actively in both Carmel High School and community activities. All have achieved high marks and have been an asset to the school, according to AFS members. They will be departing at the end of June, returning to their home countries, families and schools.

This year five students from Carmel High School will be departing this summer to spend either a year or summer abroad. They include:

Chris Nolte, son of Glen and Mary Nolte of Carmel Valley. He is currently a senior and will be leaving to live with a family in Venezuela.

Hailey Franke, daughter of Dick and Amelia Franke, is also a senior and is scheduled to live in Brazil for the following school year.

Tana Franke, also the daughter of Dick and Amelia is currently a junior and is scheduled to live in Turkey.

Maria Lee, daughter of Ed and Jo-Ellen Lee of Carmel Valley, is a sophomore and will be attending school in Ecuador.

Kirstie Andersen, daughter of Carl and Saundra Andersen of Carmel Valley, is also currently a sophomore and will be spending the year in Denmark.

The Carmel Chapter was founded in 1953 and, with the exception of an inactive period from 1960-66, has sent 59 students from Carmel High School abroad on a year or summer program. In return they have sponsored 35 AFS Foreign Students who have attended Carmel High School and lived with families in the Carmel area.

In order to make this all possible the AFS-Carmel Chapter needs to raise funds annually to help support this program. And this year with the larger amount of participation the funds are even more important.

Carmel residents asked to choose phone companies

Carmel telephone customers with prefixes 624, 625, and 626 are getting the opportunity to choose among six long distance companies, under Pacific Bell's Easy Access program, according to Jim Bower, area manager for Pacific Bell.

15,105 business and residence customers in the community will soon receive Easy Acess "ballots" in the mail, asking them to choose a long distance company by May 27. Customers will be hooked in to the company of their choice on June 27, 1987.

On the Monterey Peninsula, telephone customers in Monterey, Pacific Grove and parts of Pebble Beach were converted to Easy Access in June 1985. Seaside was converted last January. All Salinas customers will be converted by mid-1987. Marina and Big Sur are not currently scheduled.

In Carmel, customers are being asked to choose one of the following: American Express Expressphone, AT&T Long Distance, City Phone, MCI, or GTE Sprint. Business customers may also choose Western Union Long Distance Services.

To choose a company, customers may simply check the appropriate box on their ballot and mail back the self-addressed, stamped card to Pacific Bell. However, customers who wish to choose American Express Expressphone or City Phone should call either of these two carriers directly since both companies are not listed on the ballot.

"Once a customer chooses a long distance company, he or she will be able to access that company's services, simply by dialing "1" plus the area code (if outside 408) and the number," said Bower.

"And with Easy Access, our customers can use any of the six long distance companies serving their area, as well. All they need to do is dial a five-digit 'company code' first," he added. The company codes are listed in the Easy Access ballot package. (Some companies require you to open an account with them prior to using their services.)

There is no fee for making your Easy Access choice if the selection is made prior to May 27, or within six months after that date.

Customers who do not return their ballots, or don't contact the long distance company of their choice will be randomly assigned to a company, in compliance with regulations set by the Federal Communications Commission.

The Return of The Chicken

THE FOLLOWING incident occurred here last Monday. It's painful to relate. Many of us in the Carmel area have known the person in question for quite some time. And it may not be telling tales out of school to point out that many of us have secretly admired the person in question for quite some time.

Last Monday began like any other day. The day was golden, with only a hint of fog swirling around the mouth of the Carmel River. Suddenly the peaceful atmosphere of Hatton Fields was shattered by the most awful screeching.

"Yikes, it's falling, it's falling! Oy vey! Mama mia!"

A petite sunburned Hatton Fieldsian heard the scream and raced over on her all-terrain bike. Her name was Judy the Forthright and she prided herself on being a take-charge gal.

"Wow," she exclaimed when she reached the fallen figure, "a great big chicken. What's the matter, chicken?"

"Chicken? You called me chicken? You don't even recognize the living legend, the one and only Henny Penny?"

Judy apologized, "Of course, how silly of me. Do you still think the sky is falling?"

"The sky? Don't ruffle my feathers, lady."

"Then why are you screaming and rolling around in the gravel?"

"The stock market is falling this time! And interest rates, they're going through the roof. It's all happened before and now it's going to happen again."

"Really? That's news to me."

"The market fell 100 points in two days!"

"That's true, birdbr — I mean, Henny. But you do understand that at these levels the market can fall 100 points in two days and that represents something like a 4 percent drop. That's all."

"No, no, I don't believe you. Everybody's selling, dumping their stock."

"As a matter of fact, Henny, today there is less ownership of common stock by both large institutions and individuals than there was 10 or 15 years ago. Everybody hasn't even gotten in yet."

"Oh yeah? How about the record sales of mutual funds?"

"Seventy percent of the money currently going into mutual funds is going into bond funds and other fixed-income funds."

"But how about the averages? See how far the averages have gone up. Too high, I tell you."

"Henny, remember the old law of supply and demand? Stocks are going up, among other reasons, because the supply is shrinking. You know, mergers, acquisitions, leveraged buyouts."

"Okay, so how about interest rates. They're going through the roof."

"An upward blip is not exactly going through the roof. Try to maintain some perspective. What you should do is survey the folks hereabouts. Ask them if they would vote by their actions on an economic scenario that would kick interest rates up again. That's got to count for something."

"You don't leave a chicken much dignity."

"Tit for tat, birdy. Before you start screaming hysterically next time, you should examine more facts than one."

"So the sky is not falling?"

"Nope."

"And the stock market's not falling?"

"It could. Who knows? Why don't we examine all the facts before we start screaming."

CARMEL YOUTH BASEBALL

BY MARY PARSONS

Play ball!

ANYONE DRIVING by Larsen Field on Rio Road this week may have noticed that Carmel Youth Baseball's new season has already started. Games began on Monday, April 20, in all divisions. (Next week's Pine Cone will have the first reports of 1987 play.)

According to CYB President Gerald Pullen, Carmel's organized youth baseball began more than 30 years ago when Carmel Little League was incorporated on March 29, 1957 (10 years ago it became Carmel Youth Baseball). Those 30 years, and the contributions of those who made them possible, will be celebrated this Saturday, April 25, at the annual Pancake Breakfast and Opening Day ceremonies.

This year's breakfast will have a few changes from those in seasons past, most notably an expanded menu — fresh fruit, juices and milk as well as the traditional pancakes and sausages — and quicker service, with two food lines. Tickets will be on sale at the field and are $5 for adults, $3 for children 12 and under.

The cooks will start serving breakfast at 8 a.m. Team pictures will begin at 8:30 a.m.; players are to be in uniform (coaches have been given the schedule). Opening Day ceremonies will begin at 9:45 a.m.; anyone who has not had breakfast by then will be served immediately after the ceremonies. A local celebrity will be present to throw out the first pitch. Games in all divisions start at 11 a.m. The snack bar behind the Bronco Diamond will open after the breakfast is concluded.

Please plan to attend, enjoy the pancakes, celebrate with us, and cheer for your favorite team!

RARIN' TO play ball are Carmel Youth Baseball league players (top row, left to right), Willie Moore (Bronco division), Greg Johnson (Mustang), and Laura Covell (Major Softball), and (bottom row), Renee Pullen (Minor Softball) and Kristofer Pallastrini (Pinto). The league season started April 20, but Opening Day ceremonies are scheduled to start with a pancake breakfast at 8 a.m. Saturday, April 25 at Larsen Field on Rio Road.

Bach Festival Spring Salon planned

In anticipation of the 50th Season Golden Jubilee, the Carmel Bach Festival Associates will conduct their Spring Salon at 3 p.m. Sunday, May 17 at the Highlands Inn.

Clifford (Kip) Cranna will present a lecture-recital entitled, "Mozart's 'The Magic Flute,' from the Silly to the Sublime." Dr. Cranna will be joined by a singer from the San Francisco Opera to help illustrate his points. The Carmel Bach Festival will present a staged production of The Magic Flute during the summer season.

The lecture-recital will be followed by a reception and high tea with Maestro and Mrs. Sandor Salgo.

Admission is $25, with proceeds to benefit the Carmel Bach Festival. Tickets can be purchased at the Carmel Bach Festival Office at Sunset Center in Carmel.

The Carmel Bach Festival Associates, a member support group of the Carmel Bach Festival, was founded in 1984 with the purpose of generating a year-round presence in the community for the summer festival. New members are welcome.

CARMEL RIVER WATER NEWS

By Henrietta Stern

Conservation is not rationing

"ARE YOU really instituting rationing this summer?" "Isn't mandatory conservation just rationing in disguise?"

Judging from these and other calls received by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District this week, it's clear there is confusion about recent board action. The purpose of today's column is to explain the difference between conservation and rationing and discuss what the board actions of April 13 and 14 mean to you.

Repeat after me..."Conservation is not rationing." Before I explain why, let's first note some similarities. Both are methods to extend a limited resource — in this case, water — over time. Both entail public reduction of water demand in some way. Both programs may entail voluntary or mandatory components. OK, so what's the difference?

Conservation is typicaly a response to a potential water shortage, not an impending or actual scarcity. People are asked to make long-term reductions in their water use, but at low intensity. Often, mechanical means to save water (such as toilet dams or low-flow shower heads) or subtle lifestyle changes (such as planting colorful drought-tolerant gardens) are suggested. If conservation goals are not met, we become more vulnerable, but do not experience a direct "real time" impact.

In contrast, rationing is a response to an acute or impending water shortage. It typically entails short term, but higher intensity water reduction that has a greater impact on people's lifestyle.

For example, water use may be restricted to a specified number of gallons per person per day. In order to meet this requirement, sacrifices must often be made. Long-term peninsula residents certainly remember the withered gardens, unwashed cars, and grey water recycling of the 1976-77 drought. If rationing goals are not met, we experience the direct impact of inadequate supply — we turn on the faucet and get no water!

So what's the story regarding conservation and rationing within the water management district? As a general policy, conservation is needed on the Monterey Peninsula because we don't have the facilities to supply water in a drought. As water from the proposed New San Clemente Dam would not be produced until 1993, pending voter and agency approvals, long-term water reduction through conservation is prudent. Thus the board, with advice from city and council representatives, is considering a district-wide conservation ordinance.

This ordinance focuses on mechanical changes, not lifestyle or activity changes. For example, it would require residents and businesses to replace existing standard toilets with ultra-low flow toilets and showerheads upon sale. All new construction must also install these water-saving plumbing fixtures. Existing hotels and motels must retrofit their bathrooms with low-flow shower heads, faucet aerators and toilet dams. Free water-saving kits for bathroom fixtures will be distributed to residents for installation.

On April 14, the board considered a revised rationing method for use only in the computer simulation model for the proposed dam. The newspaper headlines about "revised rationing plan" referred to this series of conceptual decisions written in computer code. The so-called rationing plan, which elicited several concerned phone calls, is not being considered for use this year.

The board has made no decision regarding water rationing to date. However, on May 11, the status of our water supply will be assessed and a decision on rationing will be made, based on a prescribed set of standards. The board must consider this year's supply, and the potential of another dry year. It is clear we have enough supply for this water year, but another dry winter could create water supply problems. It comes down to a judgment call on risk...save water now, in case you need it next year, or not? What would you do if you were in charge?

Come to the May 11 board meeting at 7:30 p.m., Monterey City Council Chambers, to learn more about it!

REAL ESTATE TODAY

An Essential: Good Managers

By Jayde Thompson

Whether you own a string of shopping centers scattered through several states or your first duplex just down the street, you have something in common with other property owners: someone has to look after your property. If your property isn't maintained on a daily basis it could easily fall into disrepair and decline in value. Also, your poorly maintained property would probably not earn the respect of your tenants.

Many owners just don't have the time to make sure their property is properly kept up and all emergency repairs are made quickly and effectively. That's where the professional Realtor can help out. No one is better qualified to act as a property manager.

From having your duplex's lawn mowed every week to obtaining competitive bids on a new roof for your shopping center, a Realtor can make things run smoothly for you, your property, and your tenants. A Realtor's advice and skill as a property manager can easily make the different between a headache of an investment and trouble-free ownership.

No matter what the size of your investment, you need a good manager! If you'd like to find out more about what a professional Realtor can offer you as a manager, call me, Jayde Thompson, your Carmel specialist at Real Estate By The Sea at 624-1444 or stop by my office at San Carlos and Seventh.

VENTANA WILDERNESS REPORT

BY GLENN R. STEWART

The Wilderness Imperative

WILDERNESS HAS an intrinsic value to the individual. It is a matter of deep concern to me that while some have extolled the personal importance of their ventures into the wild, few have attemped to develop a link that would demonstrate that wilderness contact is valuable to a broad spectrum of people.

It is puzzling that wilderness is preserved for every reason except its importance to us, today. It is set aside as a legacy for the future, as habitat for species on the brink of extinction, and as a pool of abundant natural diversity that may hold the key to some future miracle medical cure.

The value of natural settings to the individual does not weight heavily in the land use decision-making process because it is so difficult to quantify.

Henry David Thoreau, John Muir and others championed the notion that wilderness held important benefits for modern man. Today, our Sierra Club calendars are filled with phrases quoted from their prolific journals. But wilderness appreciation continues to be a matter of personal discovery. The experience remains private because of its sometimes spiritual overtones. I have wondered at this phenomenon. Wondered at the root of the deep, personal appeal that wilderness holds for those who take the time to experience it. The sensation is universal, but inadequately described.

I am working toward a new approach to this issue because I am convinced of the importance of wilderness contact to the well-being of the human psyche. A further goal is to describe and quantify the beneficial effects of wilderness to people — all people — as new support for the wilderness preservation issue.

Carl G. Jung wrote about the existence of a "collective unconscious" or universal memory for humankind. According to Jung, this faculty is buried deeply and is inaccessible to our conscious mind. Yet, extant in the cerebral makeup of one and all in Jung's analysis, is a linear memory link with the primordial beginnings of humankind.

If one can accept the existence of such an unconscious link with the past, it follows that time spent in the wilderness — and especially solitary time — might tend to awaken those deeply hidden memories. That is, the conscious mind's perception of a small campfire surrounded by a ring of trees with the moon and stars above, might find a parallel in the fuzzy recesses of the mind. An unexplainable sensation of solace and belonging results that may in fact be rooted in the link established with 15,000 years of human history that occurred within the constraints imposed by nature.

Given this scenario of potential connectedness with the past, it is reasonable to expect that wilderness would have a calming and stabilizing effect since it was nature that cradled humanity for the vast bulk of its history. Wilderness camping and hiking could then be described as a sort of "going home" since the modern life we enjoy, so well insulated from the elements, is quite foreign to the human animal.

Many describe a sense of renewal that is central to their trailblazing adventures. What is it that is renewed, but the aspect of our soul that is rooted in a long history of close association with all life on the planet. A sense of tradition, history and oneness is realized that may not be found in the urbanized, mobile and fragmented society of today. A sense that is essential to our psychological well-being. 429-4623

KIWANIS CLUB DONATES FUNDS TO 'GRIEFBUSTERS' PROGRAM

Staff members of the Hospice Resource Center met at the Elks Club recently to present a status report on the Griefbusters program to the Monterey Kiwanis Club. Griefbusters is a Hospice Resource Center program designed to aid young people in coping with the loss of a loved one. Counselors and volunteers provide discussions, presentations and workshops to help young people understand and work through the grieving process.

The local service organization gave the Resource Center a $1,100 grant for the Griefbusters program last year, and the funds went to produce a manual for teachers and administrators.

The Griefbusters program and manual are offered to all 44 schools on the Monterey Peninsula.

Hank Lane, Kiwanis committee chairman for the project, is a long-time supporter of Hospice. "We've been involved with all areas of the organization, and we're glad we can be of some help to the Resource Center, as well as to the entire community by supporting this program;" he said.

Last year, the Kiwanis Club also gave a $1,500 grant to the Resource Center for library bookcases.

General Plan Committee hearing: 90 minutes, 2 pages

By NANCY HILLS

IT TOOK an hour and a half to discuss two pages.

The Carmel Planning Commission and General Plan Review Committee began public hearings on the proposed changes in the text portion of the general plan April 15 and found the Issues of Local Significance section of the Land Use Element was certainly significant to many people at the meeting.

It took 90 minutes to move on from those pages and the changes on the status of the 1982 questionnaire which is used extensively for reference in the existing plan.

Another point of discussion was the proposed changes to commercial zoning.

The committee, also reviewing the zoning ordinance, is currently proposing changing the Central Commercial zone back to pre-1984 boundaries.

That would move it to Seventh Avenue between Mission and Dolores streets. It currently ends halfway between Dolores and Mission streets north of Seventh Avenue.

That is what it has been for 60 years, councilman and committee chairman Robert Evans said, and changing it 1984 was "punitive."

Debates also continued on the committee's deletion of Ocean Avenue as a special zone in one section while identifying it later as special in another section; the removal of any reference to limiting the number and type of businesses in town; the means of encouraging residentially-oriented businesses in town; and the elimination of design review in the residential zones.

Attorney Francis "Skip" Lloyd started the public comment off by telling the commission he felt that the changes in the plan "is not strictly an amendment but a complete redo of the process."

"I urge you to agree to make some attempt to reach the body politic," he added.

Many people do not like to speak at meetings or cannot attend, he added.

The process for public input has been a source of contention between the committee and some members of the public.

Lloyd's comments focused on the committee's attitude toward the 1982 questionnaire.

The committee's added text in the introduction reads: "Some question may be raised concerning sole reliance on the results of the questionnaire. The lack of factual information relevant to both sides of various issues may have tended to produce a subjective or emotional response on some of them.

"Some answers are inconsistent within themselves, an example being that only about 10 percent of the respondents use public transit regularly, yet 72 percent say it is adequate.

"Some replies previously considered to represent 'overwhelming' feeling of the community may in fact be less positive when allowance is made for the phraseology of the questions and the number who failed to respond. The questionnaire should be viewed with these caveats."

Lloyd told the committee and the commission they should state some basis for all their changes in the plan, particularly since their wording was an "impeachment" of the questionnaire. Others in the audience supported his statements.

There was no evidence, he added, that people responded emotionally.

"They answered in the privacy of their own homes," with plenty of time to consider their responses, Lloyd said.

Joyce Stevens, said that if they feel the questionnaire was inaccurate, they should do a new one.

Changes that also sparked considerable discussion were deletions within the first paragraph of the Issues of Local Significance in the Land Use Element.

The committee proposed deleting the word "overwhelming" in reference to Carmel citizens feeling that there was too much commercial use in town and deleting an entire section that reads:

"The communtiy attitudes further clarify this point by indicating that not only is there just too much commercial use in general, but the types of commercial uses do not represent the proper mix of uses for Carmel. Specifically, residents have indicated they want to control the number of certain types of visitor-serving commercial uses and promote and encourage more resident-serving commercial uses, and in general they want to promote high-quality businesses."

The committee has substituted in place of the deleted sentences:

"The mix of commercial uses for Carmel should be carefully considered and effort should be made to encourage a mix that is beneficial to the city. This effort should also promote and encourage more resident-serving commercial uses, and in general high-quality businesses."

Howard Nieman stated that he believed that the wording should remain the same because "there is no change in the community attitude to justify the deletion." He also objected to the deletion of policies to restrict the number and types of businesses. Others in the audience agreed with his conclusions.

Committee member and planning commissioner Olof Dahlstrand said he believed that limiting businesses in that way was "unworkable" and just created a "black market for those types of businesses." Also, in the past other businesses were thought to be too many, such as gas stations, and now there are too few.

However, committee member and commissioner Ed Hicks said he "guaranteed" that wording to limit the number and type of businesses would be put back in.

A change in the oft-quoted Land Use preamble which states Carmel has "a predominantly residential character" was suggested by Shirley Haile.

"To be blunt about it, to refer to Carmel like that is simply not true. It's just a traditional phrase," Haile said.

"There is a unique residential character and a unique visitation center," he said.

The commercial character is as important as the residential character, he added.

"The issue is how to keep Carmel a unique and special place," Haile said.

"I think that Mr. Haile has distilled the very essence of the problem every general plan committee has struggled with — the desire to strike the balance we are all looking for," said Evans.

David and Donelle Freitag, Conservative Baptist Foreign Mission Society appointees to Italy, will speak during the 11 a.m. service, Sunday, April 26, at the First Baptist Church, 8340 Carmel Valley Road at Schulte Road, Carmel.

Their goal as missionaries is to see people become Christians, to see these new Christians form churches, to help train Italian Christian leaders and to see these Italian Christian churches become a movement that will affect Italy as a whole.

Cholesterol level too high

More than 50 percent of adult Americans have blood cholesterol levels above 200 milligrams per deciliter, a level at which the risk of coronary heart disease begins to rise sharply, says the American Heart

Victims wait too long

Each year approximately 350,000 people die of heart attack before they reach the hospital. Many of them might have been saved, says the American Heart Association, because the average victim waits three hours before seeking medical help.

FATHER FARRELL'S WISDOM

A prayer for all

CARMEL ROTARY, LA PLAYA

The Royal Stuart Clan was referred to by the English as the "Pretenders to the Throne." Their cause is alive and doing well in Carmel-by-the-Sea. A block from here is the home of the Right Honorable Viscount Barclay Ferguson of Lamont.

He is a colorful and talented artist, but he himself is his own best work of art. He swears allegiance to His Royal Highness, Prince James Edward Stuart, Prince of Scots, a descendant of Mary Stuart, or Mary Queen of Scots. She was that clever, charming personality who fell victim to the jealousy and prejudice of Elizabeth I.

Mary composed the following prayer while she was held prisoner and even if you have heard it many times before, it bears repeating since it suffers repetition happily and is an excellent Petition for this Eastertide of 1983.

MARY STUART'S PRAYER

Keep us, O God, from all pettiness; let us be large in thought, in word, in deed.

Let us be done with fault finding and leave off all self seeking.

May we put away all pretense and meet each other face to face without self pity and without prejudice.

May we never be hasty in judgement and always generous.

Let us take time for all things, and make us to grow calm, serene, and gentle.

Teach us to put into action our better impulses, straight forward and unafraid.

Grant that we may realize that it is the little things of life that create differences, that in the big things of life, we are as one.

And O Lord God, let us not forget to be kind! Amen.

"I'm just an old-fashioned doctor." That was what 82-year-old Dr. Jean Jones Perdue said when she recently celebrated her 54th year of practicing medicine. A founding member of the Miami Heart Institute, Dr. Perdue graduated from the University of Virginia Medical School in 1932. On her 54th anniversary, she was serving as an active member of health committees and an attending physician at two major hospitals, working 66 hours a month for the State of Florida and taking refresher courses at the University of Miami, where she also teaches. Dr. Perdue, who introduced the practice of geriatric medicine in South Florida before that term was even used, explained her full-time schedule of work this way: "When other people give so much to your life, it's a shame not to give some back."

CARMEL VOICE

By Sam Salerno

A big shocker

SORRY TO hear (as are hundreds of his fans) that Pat "The Singing Sheriff" Duval has been taken ill. We known that everyone in this area is rooting for his speedy recovery and that we'll be able to hear his "golden pipes" once again at Los Laureles Lodge in Carmel Valley.

Pat, as you know, has been featured in two Clint Eastwood movies, Sudden Impact, and The Enforcer. Recently he was featured in a supporting role in the move Quiet Cool which premiered locally at Carmel's Village Theater. He's also guest-starred with Angie Dickinson on Doris Day's Best Friends, a CBN television show, but other than all these accolades, Pat is probably one of the most well-liked person in the Salinas-Monterey-Carmel area and we wish him God speed. He's been a friend of mine since I returned to Carmel 18 years ago and the "gang" down at Friar Tuck's is anxious to see him back there each morning for breakfast and gossip. Greg won't have anyone to pick on for awhile.

SCRIPT WRITING

Two locals putting their writing talents together and are doing the "final" drafts for a major movie script. The two talented ones are Joanne Mathewson and Lisa McKaney. We know the plot but until it's sold, we can't divulge it but believe me, it is a smasher! As soon as it's sold, you will be the first to know. I can tell you the story relates to this area!

SHE'S THE CAT'S MEOW

The SPCA should pin a rose on Rita Deroche for what she's done to save cats that would be put to death or killed in some other manner. This woman is amazing and the only person I know who can literally train "wild" cats...the kind you find in the hills, at shopping centers rummaging through garbage cans, etc. Rita has had a love for animals since she was a child growing up in Belgium. In fact, on the farm there she raised 20 ducks.

Recently she brought home five cats (wild) which were hanging around a local savings and loan in Carmel. After much hissing, scratching, etc., Rita (with the help of husband Nick) has them as mellow as domesticated cats. And mind you, this isn't the first time she's done this. There was a time when she and Nick traveled deep in Carmel Valley to feed and nurture some wild cats. They too became docile with "love" and training. After she domesticates them, they are neutered and given homes. And when she and Nick travel to places like Palm Springs, Reno, and Tahoe, she is equipped with cat food and the process starts all over again!

Bravo, for Rita and her love for animals! Need more like her in Carmel!

YOU MEET THE NICEST PEOPLE

In town to improve his golf game at the Golf Clinic at Pebble Beach was dapper Tony Habib of Maui. On that island, he is a member of the Wilea Country Club. Tony is the owner of the Viva La Familia Restaurant but he usually spends his time on the golf course playing the likes of Carmel's own Dick McClean and Mark Rolfson. While he was here, Tony played Pebble Beach, Spyglass Hill, and Peter Hay, three of the courses featured in the clinic at Pebble Beach. Nice guy!

In from Greensboro, North Carolina was Joe Pippin of the Air Conditioning Corp. to see the sights and to hit that little white ball around the golf course. He too played Pebble Beach and was delighted with what he saw. Joe is a friend of Dick Buxton who entertained Joe at the Marin Country Club Golf Course.

From Vancouver, British Columbia we had the pleasure of meeting Doug Masse who dashed down from San Jose (where he is at a two-week seminar) to get in a little golf. He tells us that the influx of tourists during Expo '86 was tremendous and a great "shot" in the arm for their economy in Canada. Doug says, "Vancouver will never be the same." He loves Carmel and particularly the golf courses and restaurants here.

IF EASTER WEEK IS ANY INDICATION

Look for a "big" summer if Easter week is any indication of what is in store for Carmel. Our city was jammed all week and there were many smiles from the faces of local business people. I know Ocean Avenue was "a zoo" both Saturday and Sunday of last week. I trust that they are not just "lookers" but "buyers." With the kind of rents local businessmen pay, it stands to reason they are expected big things this summer.

See you later!

Second Big Sur Marathon draws world class runners

DEDICATED RUNNERS will pursue 26.2 miles of "scenic but challenging" Big Sur coastline during the second Big Sur International Marathon, arriving Sunday, April 26.

Besides scenery, the more than 1,400 runners registered for the event will encounter recorded classical music and aid stations supplied with, among other things, 2,000 peeled and sectioned bananas.

The race is scheduled to begin at 7 a.m. Sunday at Pfeiffer-Big Sur State Park. The first runners are expected to reach the race finish at Rio Road and Highway 1 at approximately 9:30 a.m.

The Big Sur International Marathon is the largest all-rural marathon in the United States, according to record keepers for The Athletic Congress (TAC), the official government body for road and track racing.

This year's event boasts entrants from 36 states and 15 foreign countries. England, Germany, Denmark, France, Iran, Japan, the Philippines, Vietnam, Australia, Brazil, Guatemala, Mexico, Canada, Bangladesh and Costa Rica have all contributed marathoners to the Big Sur race. The eldest registered runner is 70, the youngest is 16.

The Big Sur Marathon begins among the giant redwoods in Pfeiffer-Big Sur State Park, meanders and climbs northward along Highway 1 and terminates just south of Carmel.

Highway 1 from the starting line to Rio Road will be closed to regular traffic to accommodate the runners. As it was during the inaugural race last year, caravans will be established along the route to allow traffic to move at established intervals.

Caltrans and the California Highway Patrol, in cooperation with the marathon; the Highlands, Midcoast and Big Sur fire departments; and the Big Sur Chamber of Commerce, have adopted the caravan schedules published here.

Highway 1 closes to southbound traffic at 5:45 a.m. Sunday at Otter Cove, south of Carmel Highlands, and at 8 a.m. at Rio Road, Carmel.

All vehicle traffic will remain in the northbound lane while the runners will travel in the southbound, oceanside lane. Caravan times are approximate, and travel speeds will be held to a 25 mph pace.

The Big Sur International Marathon has been touted as a race for runners by runners. The 25 members of the executive committee and board of directors have collectively run more than 100 marathons, more than 800 10K races and numerous ultra-marathons, half-marathons and triathlons.

Race director is William Burleigh, who serves as a Monterey County Municipal Court Judge. He took up running 11 years ago and in 1981 organized the first Big Sur 10K River Run which has raised more than $60,000 for local charities.

"The sign just south of Rio Road (the marathon's finishing point) reads 26 miles to Big Sur. It just seemed a natural," Burleigh observed.

Begun last year, the Big Sur International Marathon raised $10,000 for local charities. Among the non-profit organizations that received funds from the first race were the Big Sur Health Center, the Big Sur Fire Brigade, Ventana Wilderness Area, Midcoast and Carmel Highlands fire departments, Carmel Middle School, Apple Pie School, the Frohman Academy, Monterey Peninsula Unified School District, Carmel Red Cross, Hospice of the Monterey Peninsula, Salvation Army, Family Services Agency and the YMCA.

The 1986 winners and their times were John Skeels, 2:35:37 and Leslie McMullin, 3:00:44.

Sunday's runners face an intriguing challenge. Ron Parravano, who placed 14th in the inaugural marathon, divides the course into five legs. The first leg consists of a 2.5-mile downslope where the runners are sheltered by the giant redwoods of Pfeiffer-Big Sur State Park.

Eight miles of long flat stretches and gentle hills make up the second leg. During this leg the runners will experience pastoral scenes of cattle grazing on the hills of Rancho El Sur. At the nine-mile mark the Point Sur Lighthouse, dating back to 1889, stands as a beacon to the runners of the leg to come.

After crossing the Little Sur River Bridge runners will face the most difficult leg of the course, a two-mile climb from 40 feet above sea level to 560 feet at Hurricane Point. Leg four is a 3.1 mile downhill portion where a runner could get into trouble if he or she tries to make up time and leg fatigue sets in. Instead runners might want to experience the view and power of the graceful arches of Bixby Bridge and the breakers crashing against the rocky ledges of the coastline.

Experienced runners will conserve their energy for the final leg of the race from Rocky Point at 15.6 miles to the finish line at Rio Road, Carmel. During this final 10.6-mile stretch runners will pass Point Lobos State Reserve and the Carmelite Monastery.

More than 20 portable stereo systems will be placed along the race course, and each will be playing recorded classical music.

I Cantori Di Carmel performs Brahms' 'Requiem' in its entirety

ON FRIDAY and Saturday, April 24-25, the music community of the Monterey Peninsula will be able to hear the Brahms' Requiem in its entirety. This massive choral work will be performed by I Cantori Di Carmel with full orchestra under the baton of Sal Ferrantelli. Solists will be Peter Tuff, baritone and Caterina Micieli, soprano.

Born and raised in San Diego, Sal Ferrantelli attended San Diego State College where he earned his bachelor and master of art's degrees. He also performed with the San Diego Light Opera and conducted musicals as well as working as a featured solo entertainer.

It was at Indiana University that he was chosen to assist the renowned Julius Herford. He earned his doctorate of music from this institution.

Currently professor of choral music at Monterey Peninsula College, Ferrantelli has received much recognition for excellence in choral conducting. His most recent accomplishments include directing the Central Coast Honor Choir and conducting the Monterey Bay Symphony in a special benefit concert.

Ferrantelli's arrival on the Monterey Peninsula coincided with the formation of I Cantori Di Carmel and he has led the group since its inception. His conscientious and consistent attention to his craft has won him the respect of singers and instrumentalists alike and prompted Monterey music critic Scott McClelland to write, "Ferrantelli has singlehandedly breathed a living spirit into the great choral tradition."

Admission is $10 and tickets are available at the door or in advance from Do-Re-Mi in the Barnyard, Bookworks in Pacific Grove and Center Stage or Book Tree in Monterey. The program begins at 8 p.m. in the historic Carmel Mission Basilica.

This performance is sponsored in part by the Monterey Peninsula Cultural Council.

BRAHMS' massive choral work, Requiem, will be performed in its entirety with full orchestra by I Cantori Di Carmel. The concerts will begin at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, April 24-25, at the Carmel Mission Basilica. For details, call 625-0944.

Throughout the day, the participants, volunteers and spectators will be entertained by musical groups and at Fun Faire, where various games take place.

The event is free and open to the public.

"'RATBOY' SWIMS AGAINST MAINSTREAM.

Sondra Locke's 'Ratboy' is a fairy tale with a cutting edge...a fable about beauty and ugliness, success, love and exploitation. Locke tells this charming story swiftly, with a delicate, breezy touch. Making her directorial debut—she gets something really unusual: Grimm Brothers-style, mixing wonder with rough edges, undertones of pain beneath the fantasy.

The movie, was a critical sensation months ago in France, where it was compared favorably—and sometimes preferred—to both 'E.T.' and 'The Elephant Man.' If these claims seem extravagant, it's only because 'Ratboy' is such a modest film: unassuming, gentle, likable, made with few pretensions.

There's something simple and decent about 'Ratboy.' Its moral is natural and affecting; it resonates with that old storybook chime: 'Once upon a time...'"

—LOS ANGELES TIMES, Michael Wilmington

Big Sur Marathon: an endurance test set amidst natural splendor

"The course demands it," said Race Director Burleigh. "No other music fits the Big Sur Coast but classical. The runners can expect upbeat but serene pieces for the first 10 miles or so and dramatic strains for the finish."

Just when some runners might need an uplifting note or two, at the 23-mile mark the Highlands Inn will move its grand piano outside, and the pianist dressed in a tuxedo will play classical selections for the runners as they approach the finish.

Spectators may also be able to revel in the melodies as a 15-piece brass ensemble and a string quartet from the Monterey Bay Symphony will be performing at Marathon Flats finish area from 10 a.m. to noon. A string quartet from the Defense Language Institute's Pancultural Orchestra will entertain from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. Marathon Flats will be located in the fields adjacent to The Crossroads Shopping Village.

For additional information about the second Big Sur International Marathon, contact race headquarters at 625-6226.

LOCAL BEACHES and rocky shores provided the inspiration for Christopher Hulse's newest black and white photo series. An exhibition of the images can be viewed at the Monterey Unitarian Church, located at the top of Carmel Hill. The showing continues through May 10.

Local shoreline inspired photo show by Christopher Hulse

Monterey Peninsula photographer Christopher Hulse will be showing a series of b ack and white prints at the Monterey Unitarian Church.

Christopher Hulse has been a member of the Monterey Peninsula photographic community for the past five years. He worked for Bay Photo Lab for a number of years and has been self-employed in the photographic field for the past year.

Hulse's work has been published in Monterey Life and The Carmel Pine Cone. He has had exhibits at Dancing Man Gallery, Santa Cruz; Bay Photo Lab, New Monterey; The Wildlife and Nature Gallery, Cannery Row; and the Monterey Conference Center.

His current showing represents part of a larger series based on local beaches and rocky shores. The images are the product of many hours of meditative exploration in the intertidal zone during extreme low tides.

Mostly close-ups, the photographs create large scale scnes and landscapes from miniature worlds living among the rocks. More than simple technical feats of documenting nature, however, these images represent the photographer's inner responses to the natural world.

The exhibit can be viewed 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday and before or after regular Sunday service.

The church is located at the top of Carmel Hill near upper Aguajito Road and Highway 1.

Alzheimer's caregivers gather

A support group for caregivers of persons with Alzheimer's Disease and related disorders meets 4 to 5 p.m. every other Thursday. Meeting place is the library of the Monterey County Health Department office, 1270 Natividad Road, Salinas.

Group leader is Mary Moran, geriatric social work specialist with the Mental Health Division of the health department. For additional information, call 424-0946.

Grove from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Quilts will be exhibited in Chautauqua Hall from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A parade will punctuate Pacific Grove streets beginning at 10 a.m. Opening ceremonies will commence at 11 a.m., and from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. there will be continuous live entertainment downtown.

Low-heeled shoes are a must when touring the homes, and interior photographs are prohibited. The buildings may be viewed in any order, and participants will recieve a brochure at the first building visited.

The following structures will be open during the 18th annual Victorian Home Tour:

On Sunday, April 26, the Good Old Days celebration schedule runs as follows in downtown Pacific Grove:

Arts and crafts fair, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., live entertainment, noon to 5 p.m. A bubble gum-blowing contest will begin at 1 p.m.

THE THOUGHTFULLY restored Victorians of Pacific Grove will open their doors during the home tour scheduled Saturday and Sunday, April 25-26. The Victorian Home Tour coincides with a wealth of Good Old Days activities in Pacific Grove, including a weekend quilt show.

Making a live appearance during the program will one of the Little Rascals, Tommy "Butch" Bond. Bond has appeared in dozens of films, and shared the screen with Eddie Cantor, Laurel and Hardy, Clark Gable and Humphrey Bogart. Bond is best remembered in the Little Rascals as the neighborhood bully, Butch, who terrorized Spanky and Alfalfa.

Admission to the 5 p.m. screening is $2.50 per person, or $5 for the whole family.

When the Skyline Crest Condominiums were built some 18 years ago, they were the very finest on the Monterey Peninsula — and they still are today! They are well constructed meticulously maintained, large and have only two units per building. This one is for sale by the original owner. He bought it while it was still under construction. At that time he put in such upgrades as pegged random width hardwood floors, Jacuzzi bath, lighted closets, wet bar, bookshelves, and enlarged space downstairs. Three bedrooms and baths, this home has panoramic views from Bird Rock to Santa Cruz. The finest is priced at $315,000

A Visit to Charm School

Nobody, so far as we know, has ever attempted to dissect that fragile quality known as "Carmel Charm." Perhaps nobody should. But if someone should wish to try, he could not find a better model than the house on Casanova, 4 places north of Ocean Avenue.

For example, Carmel charmers never deal with just one surface texture. There's always a combination of stone, siding, brick and/or shingles. Here it's siding on the lower level, shingles above, all pearl grey with yellow trim around the windows and doors.

The stone is saved for the meandering path that winds up the gentle slope from front to back, passing little flower beds divided by small rock walls, reminiscent in miniature of the paddocks in the Yorkshire Dales. The path ends in a shaded stone terrace just outside the dining room.

Nooks and crannies and surprising projections are also part of the Carmel mystique. Inside and out. Nothing is ever massive or gross. Everything is on a cozy, intimate scale. Here, to prove the rule, a 5-window dormer projects from the living room toward the Carmel Bay view framed by Monterey pines. A large half-circle window looks out from the dining room over the garden.

Inside, the rooms are well-planned, with a place for everything and everything in its place. You enter through the dining room, then move through a wide arch to the living room with the traditional red brick fireplace and bookshelves.

Beyond this are 2 bedrooms and 2 baths. There are plenty of windows, tubs and shower and a cozy hallway that brings you to the kitchen. This is finished in wood, board and batten, equipped with all necessary appliances tucked in. Behind this is the charm room, a breakfast area overlooking patio and garden; and a sizeable laundry and pantry.

On the lower level are guest quarters, self contained with living room, bedroom and bath. This is totally private, with its own entrance and its own view of the sea through the trees.

If you walk one short block toward the village, you'll find yourself at the dining room door of the Pine Inn. It's that close to downtown, yet as remote and private as a Carmel cottage should be.

One does not dissect Carmel charm. It's all of a piece, a sort of tantalizing jig-saw puzzle made over a period of time, a warm and comfortable home that takes time to jell. It's $369,500.

CARMEL LEGENDS

No. 13

Few places in the country adjusted to PROHIBITION as promptly and smoothly as Carmel. There were, of course, a few bona fide bootleggers who developed a thriving business. But other solutions (no pun intended) were more inventive. For example, boating became a very popular sport early in 1919, and it was common for pleasure craft to sail down along the Big Sur coast, stopping occasionally at small inlets which almost overnight sprouted little jetties where refreshments could be found. Also a strange new illness, called the Carmel Plague, developed in that year and quickly assumed epidemic proportions. It was characterized by sluggish blood and could only be treated by regular infusions of whiskey, which explained the veins and arteries and brought almost instant relief. Doctors wrote hundreds of prescriptions for this remarkable medicine, and certain drug stores grew wealthy filling these medical orders. But the disease was persistent and continued at a steady pace until the mid-1930's.
